ABSTRACT

The Association of Research Libraries (ARL) has published this directory of over 3,000 academic and professional discussion lists and 1,688 electronic journals, newsletters, and newsletter-digests. This tool is designed for assisting individuals in locating Internet resources as well as assisting librarians in building electronic collections. The directory is organized to assist the user in locating relevant publications and discussion groups quickly. The book is divided into two listings: (1) electronic journals and newsletters (listed alphabetically) and (2) academic and professional discussion lists (arranged topically). Entries concerning journals include a short description of each title and access information. A URL (Uniform Resource Locator) is provided for over 90% of the journal and newsletter titles. Information on International Standard Serial Number (ISSN), costs, first and back issues, peer review, frequency, and submissions are also included. Scholarly and professional discussion groups are arranged by subject; entries include moderator contact information, and indicate whether the lists are edited and archived. There are separate alphabetical title indexes for each of the two sections, and a subject guide to the academic and professional lists. In addition, there is a combined index for the two sections with keywords, titles, and institutional affiliations. The directory also contains a comprehensive review of online, full-text, peer reviewed, English language journals in the areas of science, technology, and medicine entitled, "A Survey of STM Online Journals 1990-95: The Calm before the Storm," (Steve Hitchcock et al.). ## Acknowledgments

This Directory is the result of close collaboration with many people committed to the advancement of electronic scholarly publishing. In particular, gratitude is due Ann Okerson, who brought the Directory project to life as well as acting as editor and coordinator of the five previous editions. In addition to her new role at Yale University Libraries, Ann was available this year with advice and guidance. She also reviewed and copy-edited the lists section, selected the E-Publishing Article of the Year, and wrote the introduction.

Special thanks to Steve Hitchcock and his colleagues at the University of Southampton for granting us permission to publish their paper here.

ARL could not have carried out this project without the work of Diane Kovacs and the Directory Team: Leela Balraj, Gladys Smiley Bell, Paul Fehrmann, Martha Fleming, Lydia Gamble, Kara Robinson, and Dennis Viehland. Each team member has responsibility for certain subject sections while Diane coordinates the team's work and acts as editor-in-chief for the lists section. Amy L. Plofker served as proof-reader for the pre-print version of the lists section.

Over the past year ARL benefited greatly from the work of three very dedicated and talented people who, in addition to pursuing graduate work at the Catholic University of America School of Library and Information Science, spent many hours trolling the net for additions to the E-Journals section, verifying those entries and maintaining the E-Journals database: Ann E. Doty, Colleen J. Keller, and Jennifer C. Page. Special thanks is also due to Lisabeth A. King, who developed the Index for the 1996 edition. We also thank Doug Lay for his work in the early stages of this year's edition.

We appreciate the e-journal alerting services and Internet resource sites, especially NewJour, that make the job of tracking new titles easier. Thanks also to Ken Laws for sharing his paper "Using the Stanford SIFT Filter Service", which enabled the ARL Directory Staff to monitor USENET news groups for new titles more efficiently.

The production of the directory is again this year based in Michigan. Thanks is due to Dan Latterner who takes the disparate electronic files and converts them into this final paper form. We also appreciate Dan's assistance in helping to refine the production process this year and bearing with us as we dealt with a product that is twice as big as the previous edition. Once again we benefited from Jim Utsler's expertise as final proofreader of the e-journals section. We are indebted also to Paula Shanks, who recently joined the Michigan team as proofreader of the lists section.

Within the ARL office we are grateful to Duane Webster, a constant champion of the Directory Project, Allyn Fitzgerald for her wit and intelligence as well as her help with the fulfillment process and Mary Case for her assistance in the final stages of editing. This project would not have become a book this year without the support and patience of Patricia Brennan as she coordinated and guided the production process. Thank you, Patricia.

Finally, thanks is due to the developers of the journals, newsletters, and lists listed in this directory, as well as to the users of the directory. Even as organizations and individuals, including ARL, promote electronic scholarly publishing, the print edition of the directory continues to be a heavily used reference source in constant demand. We appreciate feedback and hope we can continue to provide this service in the future in a way that best meets user needs and expectations.

Introduction

Purpose and Scope:

What began as one of the first Internet directories of any kind (first edition in July 1991) has now become a standard reference work. This is the sixth year of publication of the Directory of Electronic Journals, Newsletters and Academic Discussion Lists. Again it offers readers a snapshot of serials on the Internet. (Serials are defined by library and information professionals as "publications intended to be continued indefinitely.") The book is organized into two sections prepared by two different groups of cybrarians. Both groups welcome any additional information and entries that readers provide to them.

Part I: Electronic Journals and Newsletters

The first section of Part I comprises journals, magazines and 'zines; the second (newsletters) includes not only newsletters but also other hard-to-characterize types of serials such as certain digests, reference works, bulletins, and other network hybrids. Based on work initially begun by Michael Strangelove at the University of Ottawa, the Journals and Newsletters portion of this Directory has become a database created and maintained by Directory staff at the Association of Research Libraries.

In this sixth edition, the number of journal and newsletter titles (nearly 1700) has more than doubled since last year's and multiplied by over 15 times since the first edition (there were 110 listings in 1991, 240 in 1993, and nearly 700 last year), and, as the acknowledgments make clear, many people contribute information and assistance to the project. The Journals and Newsletters Section aims to be as comprehensive as possible, and the entries represent all information that was received and verified through the end of March 1996.

Inclusion Criteria: ARL's Directory Staff scan serial announcements from several Internet lists and sites (see below) but not all those titles are included. Only those whose editors or producers return completed templates with full information to ARL, or those titles for which templates can be created at ARL from the e-serial site, are included in this book.

Part II: Directory of Scholarly and Professional E-Conferences

The scope of this section is electronic conferences, bulletin boards, and discussions of an academic nature that are found on Bitnet, Internet, and various other linked networks. A team headed for the sixth year in a row by Diane Kovacs uses its judgment in deciding what topics are of primary interest to scholars, researchers, and students.

Since 1991, these listings have increased in size six-fold times, from 517 originally to over 3,100. There is no precise count of the whole universe of electronic discussions, groups, conferences, and bulletin boards, though numbers such as 30,000 or more are frequently advanced. Therefore, the Kovacs team provides a particularly valuable service in culling that universe. The other service they offer is making the information available on the Internet for free to all users through the facilities of Kent State University. They update the resources twice a year. This printed book is derived from the first of each of those two annual revisions, with re-formatting, editing, and indexing enhanced at ARL. The directions for access to the networked versions are given in Diane Kovacs' introduction at the start of the Lists section.

E-Publishing Article of the Year

Every year, Directory staff seek out some of the best articles on electronic publication written in the past twelve months and request permission to include it in this volume as state of the art thinking. This year's choice is the survey article by Steve Hitchcock, Leslie Carr, and Wendy Hall, all of the Multimedia Research Group, Department of Electronics and Computer Science, University of Southampton in the U.K. In their "A Survey of STM Online Journals 1990-95; the Calm Before the Storm," Hitchcock and his co-authors reviewed all the extant full-text, peer reviewed journals in the areas of science, technology, and medicine towards the end of 1995 and analyzed the nature, form, and trends in the STM e-journal arena. They concluded that the numbers of such titles are exploding as current publishers create Internet publications. "Despite this," the authors point out, "the new online medium is not being exploited, since many new online journals are simply electronic editions of paper journals." This important review highlights the dilemma.

Highlights of the Past Year in Electronic Serials on the Internet

It has been our annual practice in this Introduction to outline e-journal trends of the preceding year that seem particularly significant. For the sixth edition of the Directory what strikes us most is, in part, the intensification of earlier trends, so we first review some observations from last year's Introduction and offer comments.

Continued Growth Rate in Publications Created on and for the Internet

In 1993, ARL's Office of Scientific and Academic Publishing started an e-mail list, NewJour, to report on a daily basis new serials published over the Internet. By early 1995, NewJour had posted well over 200 items to that list, a number that represented one of the factors that inspired last year's point about continued phenomenal growth rate. At this writing (May 1996), the total number of titles registered in NewJour has shot past the 2,000 mark, or a sustained average of about six new titles every working day for well over a year. One cannot help but be conscious that librarians have some specific areas where we are scrambling to catch up. While many new titles are non-traditional, and some "old" new titles have already disappeared into virtual oblivion, the clear sign is that explosive growth is still accelerating.

Critical Mass on the Internet

No reader of the mass media can fail to have observed that the Internet has become a daily household word, even to the point where TV news reports pontificate worriedly about "Internet addiction" – leading one wag to ask: What exactly are television commentators saying to us? Is it a bad thing to sit staring for hours on end at a video display tube? Whatever the implications, the fact is that the Internet has become increasingly a medium of choice for certain kinds of standard and reliable business practices. The growth of "Intranets", Internet-like information sources maintained internally to a single corporation for its own business affairs, is a sign that we have turned a corner. In particular, the boom in searching tools such as category-defining Yahoo, Alta Vista, Lycos, and WebCrawler, has made the world of Internet information far more accessible than ever. Whether such tools truly scale up is an urgent and worrying question, rising to the surface every time a user performs, say, an AltaVista search and receives thousands of hits. But for the moment, the boom feels almost manageable and many users are making the Internet a working place of first resort. The largest anxieties regularly expressed relate to traffic overload, the need for better network backup, and redundancy, with gloomsayers suggesting that commercial providers will shortly begin abandoning the medium, while some academics speak of needing an alternate network of their own. None of those anxieties, however, has translated itself into a reduction in the flood of new information and users.

Formal Publishers on the Internet; and the Move to Licensing Over Ownership

The most striking novelty of the year, apart from sheer quantity, is the arrival on the electronic journal scene of a growing number of very serious major players: traditional print publishers now moving aggressively to bring their journals into cyberspace. Academic Press, Blackwell Scientific, Cambridge University Press, Columbia University Press, Elsevier, Institute of Physics, Johns Hopkins Press, Kluwer, MIT Press, and Oxford University Press are only some of the publishers whose titles are now becoming broadly available – for a traditional print price plus – and it is becoming the case that only the exceptional publisher will not have a burgeoning Internet presence. With the arrival of today's current publishers comes a whole new set of pressing issues for librarians and researchers. Typically, such publishers make their material available on the Internet under a licensing agreement rather than on a per-copy sale basis. Those licensing agreements need to be hammered out with libraries and consortia of libraries over and over again. Each publisher's arrangement needs to be made with many suppliers, and each library's collectors need to work with many publishers and different license documents in order to build a new access program. We are still very far from having a clear sense of what "standard" terms might look like. Publishers often offer e-access to their journals as a bonus to traditional paper subscriptions and at a surcharge (10-40% over paper publication); but with astute negotiation, mutually beneficial arrangements can be made that increase a given library's access to useful material over the near term.

Big Journal Projects from the Not-for-Profit Sector

The Johns Hopkins University Press's Project Muse, for example, has made dramatic progress in offering their entire list of distinguished humanities journals via the Internet; Stanford University's High Wire Press, an entrepreneurial venture led by the University Library, is a startup enterprise with new partnership models, impressive credentials, and product; and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation's JSTOR project brings fifteen mainstream journals in fields such as history and economics online in bit mapped images backed by searchable OCR text. JSTOR's policy is to offer complete runs of its journal titles back to Volume 1 through 1990. This Project is leaving the pilot phase and working through the hard issues of access and economics as well as scaling up to key titles in a number of disciplines. OCLC is currently the publisher of some three dozen online journals for a number of journal publishers. All these services use the Internet and the World-Wide Web in one form or another, but neither the commercial nor the non-commercial sector so far shows progress with an interconnected system of publication, whereby users of one publisher's product would have easy links to material in another's. Many hopes are expressed in that direction, with much work to be done to bring dream and reality together. These initiatives can be accessed at the following sites:

Evolution not Revolution – so far

Some things are not happening, at least not as rapidly as the other observed changes. First, traditional publishers are very chary about experimenting with new forms of journal publication or with innovations in electronic-only publication. For the moment, the bulk of the boom in new scholarly and scientific journal publication on the Internet consists of e-versions of existing periodicals (Hitchcock), reflecting the print contents down to the question of issue numbers and "clumping" and even pagination. Second, available studies (admittedly premature) suggest that e-specific publication is not yet widely cited or referenced (Harter), nor yet again taken as strong material for promotion and tenure. (We have heard this year of what seem to be the first cases of tenure awarded in major universities for dossiers with significant e-published content, but so far those cases are only a trickle.)

Intellectual Property Issues

The Green Paper of 1994 published by the U.S. Department of Commerce's Working Group on Intellectual Property became with modest revisions the White Paper of September 1995 and now creeps in some part towards becoming a Congressional act of 1996 or 1997. Behind that process, the Conference on Fair Use (CONFU) discussions on the nature of fair use in an electronic environment make limited progress, with no one willing to say yet whether real fair use will survive and how important a part it will play. The decision of the 6th Circuit Court in the Michigan Document Services case (finding in favor of a bulkpack copyshop producer in a suit brought by Princeton University Press and others) surprised both publishers and readers, but at this writing the outcome of further appeals in that case is very much up in the air.

On the Net and About the Net

We close by calling attention to a representative sampling of the best new scholarly work that discusses trends in electronic scholarly publishing and some of the most reliable sites on the Internet for collecting and indexing electronic serial publications.

A. Important Internet Essays About E-Journals

"Electronic Journals and Scholarly Communication: A Citation and Reference Study."
http://www-slis.lib.indiana.edu/PrePrints/harter-asis96midtxt.html

> This essay studies the impact of electronic journals through a citation study. Impact on scholarly discourse has so far been very small in measurable terms. The journal is fundamental to formal scholarly communication. This research reports highlights and preliminary findings from an empirical study of scholarly electronic journals. The purpose of the research is to assess the impact of electronic journals (e-journals) on scholarly communication, by measuring the extent to which they are being cited in the literature, both print and electronic. The intent is to provide a snapshot of the impact e-journals were having on scholarly communication at a given point in time, roughly the end of 1995. This study provides one measure of that impact, specifically on the formal, as opposed to informal, communication process. The study also examines the forms in which scholars

"Last Writes? Re-Assessing the Law Review in the Age of Cyberspace."
http://www.law.pitt.edu/hibbitts/last.htm

This article examines the precarious position of the law review in the age of cyberspace. Part I provides essential background for this examination by showing how the law review originally developed from the interaction of academic and technological conditions in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Part II of the article canvasses the many criticisms made of the law review over the years, exploring why various criticisms arose when they did, and assessing the consequent attempts at reforming the law review system for the benefit of its academic and professional constituencies. Part III of the article notes that although new computer-mediated communications technologies - embodied in WESTLAW, LEXIS and the Internet's electronic journals - have improved distribution of and expanded access to law review material, those technologies, at least in those forms, have neither resolved the law review's fundamental problems nor realized their own potential. In Part IV, the author offers a "modest proposal" for the self-publishing of legal scholarship over the World Wide Web that would use the full potential of today's computer technology to overcome the limitations of the current law review system while providing legal scholars (and others) with an unprecedented range of intellectual and professional opportunities. The Conclusion of the article considers what legal scholars, law school Deans, the AALS and even the student editors of law reviews might do to accelerate and accommodate the transition to the new system of scholarly communication in law.

"Electronic Journals and Legitimate Media in the Systems of Scholarly Communication."
http://www.chass.utoronto.ca:8080/epc/chwp/kling/index.html

While the number of electronic scholarly journals is growing steadily, they have not yet been accepted as legitimate publication outlets by the scholarly communities. This article examines how moving from paper to electronic distribution alters the legitimacy and perceived quality of journals. It also examines the prospects for creating diverse high quality electronic journals in the next two decades.

"Scholarly Electronic Journals: Trends and Academic Attitudes: A Research Proposal."
http://poe.acc.virginia.edu/~pm9k/libsci/ejs.html

The number of electronic journals has grown steadily in the 1990s. A large part of this increase has been in scholarly or academic electronic journals. Some academics are very aware of these trends in scholarly communication and participate actively in their production. Other academics remain unaware of these new trends. This study examines two related issues: (1) What is the growth rate of these scholarly electronic journals? (2) What are the factors which affect acceptance or resistance toward electronic journals among academics? Is it possible to discover a difference between disciplines for these factors of acceptance or resistance? Information or answers to these issues will help academic librarians and researchers anticipate trends in serials collection and subscription, and help in financial planning and budgeting.

Two methodologies are used: (1) the collection of numbers, and (2) the use of a survey. The research project will collect information on the number of scholarly electronic journals, newsletters, and other electronic communications, as they have changed over time, in order to show trends and growth rates. A questionnaire will be developed to provide information on the factors of acceptance or resistance among scholars toward electronic journals.

This piece outlines the ambitious SuperJournal project, supported by 20 major UK academic and commercial publishers. SuperJournal is a project in the Electronic Libraries Program (eLib), and is supported over three years by the Joint Information Systems Committee of the Higher Education

Funding Councils and DENI. It is a major collaboration between publishers, universities, and libraries to develop multimedia electronic journals and answer the key questions about successful electronic publishing:

(1) What do readers want from electronic journals? (2) What do authors want from electronic journals? (3) What factors are involved in scaling production up from single journals to large volumes? (4) How can libraries make electronic journals available to their readers cost effectively?

"On the Road to Electronic Publishing."

Publishing is moving rapidly in to the digital age. However, the transition has just started, many players are reluctant participants, and neither the final shape of the industry nor the path there are clear. It is certain that evolution could be much faster, and great increases in efficiency and effectiveness of communications could be achieved. But little of the older printed material is being digitized, though in most scientific and technological areas, all the published material could be made available in electronic form for under 5% of the annual world-wide spending for journals in those areas. User resistance to new media, copyright constraints, and the politicians' and public's liking for visible edifices make it hard to take that step.

Frank Quinn
"A Digital Archive for Mathematics."
`http://www.math.vt.edu/people/quinn/archive.html`

If you publish an article in an electronic journal, where will it be in 50 years? How will anyone find it? How much will it cost? If you publish in a paper journal, how many people will bother to look it up if it is not available electronically? We want long-term stability so that articles will still be available in 50 years. And it must be affordable. This draft suggests the establishment of a central archive designed to provide these capabilities, and specifically tuned to the needs of mathematics. Before describing the proposal, the author discusses other models and describes some of the problems facing publication and archives in the next decade.

E-doc, an Electronic Journals and Publishing Site
`http://www.edoc.com/ejournal/`

This is the WWW Virtual Library Electronic Journals List. Entries in this catalog are added and maintained through WILMA (Web Information-List Maintenance Agent). If you know of a journal or of other lists of electronic journals, please use the addition form to notify us of the URL and e-doc will add it to the listing. Links include:

Academic and Reviewed Journals; College or University Serials; Email Newsletters; Magazines, Newspapers; Print Magazines that Maintain Web Resources; Publishing Topics; Other Resources

NewJour, an Electronic Serials Site
`http://gort.ucsd.edu/newjour`

This URL is the WWW archive of the NewJour list that posts announcements of new electronic serials to over 2500 readers every day. The WWW archive is updated twice a day and is searchable by full text for the entire archive, by title, or within letter of the alphabet. URLs are "hot-linked" so that readers can go directly to the e-journal site. Routine checks of the URLs are used to identify "dead" addresses, and staff research and identify new URLs where they can be found. NewJour draws on announcements about new e-serial startups that are posted to the list and on work of cybersurfers at the ARL and other locations. As of May 1996 there were over 2000 titles listed.

Serials in Cyberspace - a Site of Sites
`http://www.uvm.edu/~bmaclenn/`

Maintained by Birdie MacLennan of the Serials Department at the Bailey Howe Library, University of Vermont, this is easily the best site of academically oriented serials sites on the Internet today. It contains links to the following sites with electronic journal collections and services:

Academic/Research Sites (U.S.); Academic/Research Sites (Outside of the U.S.); Miscellaneous Collections and Resources (International); Selected E-Journal Titles; Associations, Societies, Organizations, Programs, etc.; Other Useful Sources (Not E-Journal Specific).

Zines:
(1) zines – on-line publications

Abstract

The provision of online journals is accelerating. This survey of full-text, peer-reviewed journals in the areas of science, technology and medicine (STM) discovered over 100 online titles towards the end of 1995. Hundreds more online journals are promised by publishers in 1996. Despite this it is clear that the new 'online' medium is not being exploited since many new online journals are simply electronic editions of paper journals. The survey highlights this dilemma. Aimed at publishers, content producers, editors, authors and archivists, the publication data presented are analysed to indicate the nature and form of these online journals as well as something of their history, to discover trends and to highlight features which may project the shape and publication processes of future online journals beyond the immediate prospect of paper-dominated electronic editions. The paper also surveys journal awareness lists, from which many of the journals included were discovered, comparing the numerous lists now available and briefly assessing their reliability for discovering online journals.

Introduction

Counting electronic journals is not easy, or so it appears. The prevailing perception is that the number of scholarly electronic journals is growing rapidly, and while for science titles there was some truth in it in 1995 if not before, this still creates a misleading impression. Judged in the wake of the phenomenal growth of the World Wide Web, given the demonstrated power and growing influence of the preeminent scholarly electronic publication, the Los Alamos physics e-print archive, and in relation to the number of paper-based scholarly journals, the number of scholarly science journals available online towards the end of 1995 was tiny.

All this is about to change. Already a number of UK-based academic publishers have announced their intention to make all their journals, hundreds of titles overall, available online during 1996. The principal enabler for some of these publishers is a pilot scheme set up by the Higher Education Funding Councils for the UK (Bekhradnia 1995) in which the publishers are guaranteed a portion of their existing subscription income directly from the councils in return for which the publishers have agreed to deliver both paper and electronic editions to subscribing UK libraries, which incidentally will pay less for these subscriptions than at present. Coincident with the resolution of the subscription issue is the publishing industry's apparent convergence on Adobe Acrobat (Brailsford and Harrison 1994), one of a number of portable document formats that allow page images to be transmitted and received electronically without loss of content or formatting data, without noticeable image degradation and without requiring expensive software viewers - in fact the viewers are free. In other words, publishers are finding ways to increase their income sufficiently to cover the marginal additional cost of generating an electronically-deliverable format from the original journal pages at the same time as the underlying technology required to implement the process has begun to reach maturity both technically and in terms of market acceptance.

As a first step this approach is justifiable from the viewpoints of publishers and, initially, of users, who will benefit from the flexibility of electronic access, the ease of printing selected pages and who will find comforting familiarity in the appearance of documents they receive. It is not clear, however, that either the technology adopted in this process or, more fundamentally, the underlying publishing philosophy are sufficiently extensible to embrace the subsequent demand for all-electronic journals. By their nature such journals must, to exploit the medium to the full, eventually diverge from their paper counterparts and require a new and radical conception of the journal as an interactive, hypertext-linked, multimedia product, with the ramifications that will become apparent in the paper.

Before being submerged by page-based electronic journals, which the paper refers to as electronic editions, this survey examines the publishing features of online journals which have evolved through a more random process and which may hold clues to the eventual, longer-term shape of the electronic journal. What are the most innovative and useful features in the best online journals, how widely are these features being adopted, and what new directions are apparent from these real implementations?

Scope of the survey

As a means to produce practical and meaningful results, the survey concentrates on English-language online journals in the fields of science, technology and medicine (STM). The term 'STM' is used as a broad market definition by many publishers of paper scholarly journals. Paper journals in these fields tend to be among the most expensive of all scholarly journals and therefore would seem to have most to gain, from the purchaser's point-of-view, through any cost reductions that electronic publishing could achieve (Duranceau et al. 1995). STM journals contain specialised terminology, they frequently include detailed mathematics and often have complex artwork and tabular data, and so are usually regarded as the most difficult journals to produce, in any form. It might follow that if it is possible to produce such journals in an electronic format, then the die will have been cast for others to copy.

The only other requirement for journals to be included in the survey was that there is evidence that full papers from the journal are available online - but not exclusively online - at the time of the survey, which was carried out during September and October 1995. Restricted access, typically through subscription requirements, meant that not all journals could be viewed. At the present stage of development it is invariably only commercial publishers that restrict access to online journals. Conforming online journals that had been announced but which were not available at the time are not covered in the survey.

Paper scholarly journals typically have the defining features that they report full and novel research results, are supported by literature references and are subjected to rigorous peer review. It was not a requirement of this survey that online journals have these features other than that published papers are subject to some form of refereeing, although for this survey this is to differentiate research-level publications from news-oriented journals rather than implying any measure of the quality of the review process of any particular journal. Refereeing of some sort, it is widely regarded, will be indispensable if online journals are to claim large numbers of users. It is not clear that novel results should be a prerequisite of papers published in online journals, in the sense of the strict criteria on originality that currently apply to the submission procedures of many paper journals. One major STM publisher, the Association of Computing Machinery (ACM), for example, with reference to the growing practice of circulating unrefereed preprints, notes in its electronic publishing plan that 'this obviously poses a challenge to the policy of not considering previously published works' (Denning and Rous 1995). Methods of referencing, especially through hypertext linking, will be enhanced dramatically with online journals (Open Journal Project 1995).

Electronic journals can be differentiated according to delivery formats. Woodward and McKnight (1995) identified three formats for electronic publication: online, CD-ROM and networked. This survey only includes what the authors described as online and networked journals, although here referring to them all as 'online', that is, available from the Internet, invariably through the World Wide Web. For scholarly journals, only online delivery enables the radical journal referred to above. The survey does not cover electronic journals available only in CD-ROM format, some of which were mentioned by Woodward and McKnight.

Issues considered are novel electronic features, publishing history, the style of publications in different subject fields, formats and additional delivery methods, the volume of material available electronically, which is especially telling for many new online journals, the impact of new non-commercial producers as well as the response of well-known commercial publishers, charging practices and future plans. Full reference details of all the journals included in this survey, including URLs for access via the Web, are given in the Table 6.

It would be wrong to claim that the survey includes every journal available online within the category defined. Some publishers, notably the multinational Elsevier (1992), have been making page images from journals available online for some time and would claim in this sense to be an electronic publisher. Approaches such as this are often highly restrictive with non-subscribing individuals denied access even to samples or experimental issues, so judgments are difficult. A contrasting approach is that of the BioMedNet information service (1995) through which a large number of biology journals are available in screen-oriented formats with innovative electronic features. The service has been available free on a trial basis but from 1996 will require a subscription both to the service and to the individual journals. To avoid distorting the overall survey towards one publisher's preferences the full list of journals available from such sources are not included in the figures.

Nor is the Los Alamos physics e-print archive part of the analysis presented here. It could be considered a single publication or a collection of journals; in fact it is not considered to be a journal, in the conventional sense, by its originator, Paul Ginsparg, who prefers to distinguish the archive from its paper counterparts. Inclusion of the archive would, as above, dominate the results of the survey, possibly masking other features. The significance of the archive is much greater than any single journal.

The broad picture

During the period of the survey 115 STM online journals were accessed through the Web if the BioMedNet journals are included, 83 if they are not. Other than the broad comparison made above with the number of paper journals, no particular significance should be attached to these figures since they are merely a function of the instant of the survey and depend on how the journals are counted. It is notable, however, that at least 44 of the 83 journals first appeared in 1995. Prior to that there were a mere 13 electronic-only journals, the only journal type that can be reliably dated from Web pages, although of course this does not include the electronic editions that were online at the time. Another perspective on the growth in the number of electronic journals over the last year or so, and on the changing culture of such journals, is afforded by comparison with a similar survey by Roes (1994).

Further scrutiny of the 83 titles shows that the majority, 48 journals, are electronic editions (Table 1). A significant number of journals, 36, require, or will require in the near future, a paid subscription to view.

This latter figure especially is higher than might be expected, to judge from similar surveys. Harter and Kim (1996), in a study for the Online Computer Library Center (OCLC) in the USA of over 130 electronic journals, which included 77 peer-reviewed journals, indicated in preliminary findings that almost 90 per cent of the electronic versions of these journals are free. Their study includes almost equal numbers of journals in the sciences, social sciences, humanities and professions. The higher percentage of fee-based journals found in this survey reflects the emphasis on technical, specialised journals that have a need to recover some of the higher costs than might be found more generally among electronic journals or electronic magazines.

Table 1. Summary of journals data

| | Commercial | Society | Other | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Free | 9 | 12 | 26 | 47 |
| Subscribed | 24 | 11 | 1 | 36 |

| Electronic-only | 10 | 4 | 21 | 35 |
| Electronic editions | 23 | 19 | 6 | 48 |
| Total | 33 | 23 | 27 | 83 |

STM online journals come from three main sources: commercial publishers, mostly well established and familiar names; learned societies which are themselves invariably highly commercial, if non-profit, organisations; and other research institutions, typically, but not exclusively, universities. The latter might suggest university presses, but this is not the case, probably because the presses generally have a limited interest in the sciences. Instead, within this sector online journals are often initiated by individuals, departments or special-interest groups, sometimes across faculties or between different universities.

These three sources are fairly evenly represented as producers of online science journals, with the commercial publishers producing, by a small margin, most titles. Two-thirds of paid-for titles in the survey involve commercial publishers, although it is not true to say that all titles from this sector are fee-based. More predictably, all but a single title from the university-based sector, that is those groups that produce journals with no intervention from commercial agents, offer free access for readers. The figures for all three sectors are shown in Table 1.

Clearly this picture will not survive far into 1996. Once the HEFC-supported journals come online, paid-for commercial titles will dominate. One advantage for UK-based readers of these journals is that papers are likely to be freely accessible from any computer that has a network connection within a subscribing establishment. In other words, despite the paid-for status these journals will appear to be free to most users in the UK. This contrasts markedly with some other commercial arrangements for subscribed online journals which restrict access to defined terminals, limit the number of simultaneous users and prescribe the permitted volume of copying or printing, often with potentially horrific and unpredictable costs to the subscribing library or institution.

Novel electronic features

A range of innovations and features become possible with online journals that are either impossible or difficult to achieve with paper journals or even with electronic editions. Since in the first instance those that new electronic-only scholarly journals need to attract are authors rather than readers, the availability and accessibility of these features are widely believed to be more important, currently, in motivating the transition from paper to electronic journals than the cost issues, which typically have little impact on the user as author.

What features? A random glance at an online journal in this survey is likely to reveal few innovations. One feature is that electronic journals can be searchable, and some are. Papers can include hypertext links to other resources. Many biology journals make particular use of this facility to link to relevant databases, but few other journals offer links to resources beyond the journal. Colour graphics and photographs are not as costly to include in electronic journals as they are to print on paper, but they are rarely used, and video and audio, unsurprisingly, are to date even rarer. Electronic editions can present materials in advance of paper publication, and many do, although unedited preprints are not common.

Currently one of the best examples of the use of these features in an online journal is Astrophysical Journal Letters, launched in July 1995. This presents the letters section in advance of publication of the full paper journal. The growing archive is searchable, and in html screen form papers have hypertext links from thumbnail figures and photographs to full images, threaded links to create themes and support subject categories, and external links to a database of abstracts. Papers are also available in pdf form for local printing.

Readers of online journals can be alerted to new papers or issues via electronic mail, discussion lists or newsgroups. Clearly this is not exclusive to online publications, but such an information service presupposes that the recipient is online and therefore seems to carry more weight if the publication is also online. Importantly, these services can be extended to embrace higher degrees of interactivity, open peer commentary or 'scholarly skywriting' for example (Harnad 1990), which is greatly more effective for online publications. A handful of journals in the survey have one or more such services.

That these features are sparsely distributed among the current generation of online journals is evident from Table 2, which appears in two parts for electronic-only journals and electronic editions since this distinction has a bearing on the features that are possible. Table 2 also indicates for each journal the amount of material that is available online. In many cases a journal has to become established and active before the electronic features evolve.

In this latter respect there is an obvious difference between the two journal categories. For electronic editions it is for the publisher to decide how many papers from the current issue and how much of the back archive to make available online, while for many electronic-only journals the papers published in a whole year would not fill a single issue of a paper journal. For these electronic-only journals it is a classic Catch-22 case: no features, no papers; no papers, no features. This emphasises the need, for online journals as much as for paper journals, for fundamental editorial judgments, for differentiation and the need to identify a competitive edge regardless of technology.

There have been some electronic-only successes. Some of the early online journals in mathematics have become established, as in computer science has the Journal of Artificial Intelligence Research from 1993, all with a steady if moderate flow of papers. Psycoloquy, in 1990 one of the first online journals and perhaps one of the best known examples of the genre outside its specialist field, has evolved to encompass new features: from plain text, which is still supported and archived, to the more flexible html version with hypertext threads between papers. The journal has pioneered open peer commentary online, and readers are notified of new papers, all with no restrictions on access. Strictly, nothing is made available on paper.

Current journals have hardly begun to implement the novel features that online delivery makes possible. Online journals will develop and improve, but a difficult decision has to be made by publishers and editors of prospective new journals if they are to realise these improvements: publish an edition on paper, or remove paper from the process entirely. Paper journals are the only commercially proven medium, and established paper journals continue to attract the majority of papers and the best papers (Harnad 1995). Paper journals are a constraint on the features of 'parallel' online journals, however. A publication predicated on the paper journal model cannot have real interactivity at online speeds and multimedia content, for example, without diverging from the paper production process and content. Are these features ultimately to be denied? Clearly not, but there is as yet no obvious path from a paper or 'parallel' publication to an electronic-only publication, and as long as this remains so publishers and editors will increasingly be faced with this dilemma.

Presentation formats: a timeline for online journals

From the first online journals at the beginning of the decade the format of an online journal has typically been a product of the subject of the journal, the time of its first appearance and, once again, whether it is an electronic-only journal or an electronic edition. Table 3 is organised to demonstrate this.

Mathematics has generated the largest number of online journals of any field. The first maths journals appeared online in 1993, and the majority are electronic-only. All but two of these journals are available in PostScript, a format designed for page printing but which can be produced from copy supplied in the mathematician's formatting language TEX. So far only two, more recent, online maths journals provide the additional option of distilling the PostScript copy into Adobe's related but more flexible pdf (Smith 1995). Most of these journals also provide the option to view in TEX or `dvi` formats.

Physics journals make similar demands on mathematical formatting capabilities, but owing to the dominance of the Los Alamos e-print archive there is just one electronic-only journal and a number of electronic editions, almost all of a recent vintage. This, and the fact that most electronic editions in this field are the half-hearted attempts of learned society publishers playing catch-up with the e-print archive by extracting letters and short communications rather than full papers from the journals, has resulted in a greater variety of formats, including html and pdf as well as some examples of PostScript, TEX and `dvi`.

Medicine and biology are both well represented with online journals. Apart from The Online Journal of Current Clinical Trials from 1992, the earliest journals in these areas appear to have begun in 1994, and combined with the lesser reliance on presenting mathematical formulas but the strong dependence on graphics, html is almost uniformly the format of choice, with some publishers of electronic editions preferring pdf. There is one major difference between the two fields. While a number of major biology titles are available online, none of the most prestigious medical journals are available in this form. In biology the number of electronic editions has thus reduced the scope for new electronic-only journals, but in the medical area electronic-only journals are in the majority.

It would be hard to claim significant impact of online journals in any other field. At the more technical end of the spectrum PostScript dominates: the Journal of Universal Computer Science has temporarily withdrawn an option for html because of problems with presenting mathematics, but is still available as PostScript. The few online journals in the more general areas of information technology and education invariably use html.

Some other formats of limited remaining relevance require comment. Plain text, or ascii, was the most universal format available to the earliest online journals, and it still has an archival role for these journals. Today it has its advocates as an optional format that can be viewed on the most basic systems and which may be important if journals are to be accessed in developing countries, but it does not have the required sophistication to represent most scientific materials.

Some argue that as a stable and standardised format ascii should be used to archive many more online journals. For the same reason, a case is made for storing archived paper journals as scanned bitmap images, with the anticipation at least of being able to view the required pages in, say, 50 years time. For practical purposes, especially for electronic-only journals and even for electronic editions, bitmaps serve no purpose other than archival backup. In this survey only the journal Bioscene is presented in this form. The journal has the largest online archive of all those in the survey, stretching back 21 years, but the image quality is poor, which the publisher appears to acknowledge. Elsevier's TULIP project (1992) is also a major user of this format.

Rich text format (rtf) is used by a single journal, the Annals of Saudi Medicine, although this journal is also available as html. As a format that has a substantial user base through its connection with Microsoft Word and which is widely used for document transfer, rtf nevertheless fails to deliver the range of presentation features necessary for typical STM journals and is not a sufficiently standardised cross-platform format for publishing applications.

The remaining format to appear in Table 3 is Guidon. Strictly it is not a format but a graphical user interface (GUI) developed by OCLC for the delivery of journals that use its Electronic Journal Online service, but it is included here as it controls the display of the journals viewed through it. Guidon is a Windows-only GUI which supports figures, tables, equations, full-text searching and local printing. Five journals in this survey can be viewed through Guidon, although some of these can use other interfaces such as Netscape Navigator.

It may seem odd, heretical even, not to mention sgml. Despite its undoubted long-term importance to electronic publishing as a storage format, it is not currently a presentation format for any journals covered here. Its influence, however, is pervasive. HTML is a specialised sgml document type definition (DTD), a particular instance of sgml. The relative simplicity of the html instance of sgml is both its strength and its weakness, but while html has been extraordinarily successful at establishing itself as the language of the Web, the debate on its further development has to consider how to extend its capabilities for professional publishing applications without losing the simplicity that has made html so popular. If the resulting html fails to represent, say, mathematical or chemical symbols adequately, more information-rich sgml DTDs will need to be developed.

Stimulating electronic journals

With a view to longer-term remodelling of the journal as an electronic-only product, on the basis of the survey it may be worth speculating on the motivations for developing such journals. Given the stronger representation of some fields with electronic-only journals, processes must be at work to enhance the desirability and usefulness of this type of publication in these fields.

Physics had a preprint culture, in which papers are circulated in advance of refereed journal publication, some time before electronic distribution became viable (Ginsparg 1994), but once it did it was a natural medium for physicists to exploit for preprints. Maths similarly has developed preprint services, and a long history of comprehensive review journals in this field suggests a concern with an organizational framework that improves the awareness and accessibility of literature within the field. As has already been mentioned, the necessary formatting tools such as TEX were available to enable the complex features typically found in papers in these subjects to be viewed effectively and reliably.

If the use of TEX were a prerequisite for authors of papers to be published online then it is unlikely that the culture of electronic publishing would have spread much more widely than these two fields. As more amenable environments for the creation and presentation of electronic papers have emerged, however, more disciplines began to exploit them. Biologists required access to graphical, often three-dimensional, representations of molecular structures. They recognized the potential to compile databases of these computer-generated images and to make them freely available online. These databases in turn have become a resource that online journals can exploit by linking directly between journal papers and items in the databases. It is this 'interconnectedness' that is clearly a motivating factor.

The same factor applies in medicine, although here the advent of electronic publishing is embraced more reluctantly, as a number of high profile newspaper articles and editorials testify (New England Journal of Medicine 1995). Medical researchers are unwilling to trust critical results to a new medium without the confidence that long-established verification procedures can be reproduced through this medium and will not be prone to abuse or malpractice. Despite this, the field has its advocates, practitioners who have championed electronic publishing in prestigious sources (LaPorte et al. 1995), and has gone on to produce a reasonable number of journals. It appears to be one of the most active fields for new developments.

It may be surprising that computer science is poorly represented by electronic journals, but the reasons may now be clearer. None of the motivations identified above apply strongly in this field. There are a number of online ftp archives of computer science reports, for example the Universal Computer Science Technical Reports Index at the University of Indiana (VanHeyningen 1995), but there is no organised preprint culture and wide distribution of papers in this form appears to be less important than in physics. Computer science has a conference culture which appears to be migrating online, although in an ad hoc rather than any focussed way. Computer scientists can handle the formatting tools perfectly well if required, but appear to have little need or desire to do so. The computer science world is certainly physically connected, but the organised information 'interconnectedness' displayed elsewhere has not yet developed to the same degree since there are no focal points such as major databases and few established connection structures that can be mimicked and developed online. Where are the eminent and influential computer scientists who are prepared to champion new electronic publications in the face of the current dilemmas, doubts and divisiveness?

In the longer term electronic publishing may be an agent to change the boundaries between academic disciplines. More immediately online journals will be subject based, and in any given field the motivations for new online journals will depend on a shared vision of what is possible and the ability to build on established cultures within that field. Where these motivations are unclear, electronic-only journals if not electronic editions will be slow to materialise.

Funding electronic journals

There will always be a cost attached to the production of online journals, even though a glance at Table 4 might suggest otherwise. How that cost is absorbed is crucial to the future of online journals. Should the cost be borne by the reader or by a subscriber on the reader's behalf? Should it be contributed by the author? The survey reveals that a number of ways are being used to pay for online journals, with the subscription model prevailing strongly for electronic editions, but also points to possible instability for some electronic-only journals.

On the issue of funding, a clear distinction again arises between electronic-only journals and electronic editions. Table 4 is structured to highlight this. Within this framework journals are grouped by types of producer, and then according to whether they are, and will continue to be, free to the reader.

There is little chance that publishers will forsake the long-established practice of generating income from subscriptions. It is fair to assume that most electronic editions will require a subscription to view, even if that subscription is in essence to purchase the paper copy. Subscribers will increasingly be offered more options to purchase one or more versions on paper, CD-ROM or online, as is currently available for example for Applied Physics Letters Online (1996). There will be those who are sceptical about paying more for another copy of the same material; if for an additional version the extra cost is in the region of 15 per cent, as it is in some cases with APLO, this may be justifiable, but not perhaps up to 40 per cent as is also evident. One publisher at least, although its journals are not covered in this survey, charges less to subscribe to an online copy than to the paper journal. Online journals from the Muse project of Johns Hopkins University Press (1995) are available for 10 per cent less than on paper.

A more radical approach is 'pay-per-view', where readers might be requested to bill an account each time they elect to view, or download, a paper from a given journal or publisher. There is no evidence yet that this will be widespread. The structure of viewing arrangements on BioMedNet suggests that it is considering this option. During the trial period users were asked, for each paper selected via a button link, to authorise a payment of $0.00. Cambridge University Press, publisher of Protein Science Online, also appears to be considering this approach. The ACM's electronic publishing plan (Denning and Rous 1995) makes clear reference to pay-per-view, although no journals are yet available to assess.

While some journal users express a willingness to be charged on a pay-per-view basis, this is typically at penny rates and may not encourage publishers into this unpredictable way of financing journals. There must also be some concern that a pay-per-view scheme that charges significantly more, say in the region of current copyright clearance fees of a few dollars, will adversely affect one of the principal benefits of online electronic publishing, that of linking between papers, journals and other resources. Links will be less appealing if each one has a price tag attached to it. Speculatively, one might see the growth of link publishers, using new approaches such as the Distributed Link Service (Carr et al. 1995), who will buy the rights to access linked materials, while charging users a single fee or subscription for a continually updated link service. The commercial objective of a link publisher must be to enable beneficial use of links on such a large scale that the volume of use creates a cost-effective environment for link development.

It could be argued that to realise the full potential of scholarly online journals, especially in terms of interactivity or linking, they must be free to the reader. At the very least, the costs or barriers to the reader's use of journals must be reduced. One way of doing this may be author page charges (Harnad 1994). This has long been an accepted method of funding paper journals in some fields, although the practice may be less popular than it was. Just two journals in the survey impose author page charges to fund publication, the electronic-only journal InterStat and the learned society electronic edition Florida Entomologist (FE). Another learned society, the Optical Society of America, is considering page charges for Engineering and Laboratory Notes. These societies apart, there is little evident motivation for page charges, and it appears this would be unlikely to change without some fundamental change in the funding provisions for research, or much lower page charges than have been common or are being applied now to FE.

Some electronic editions will continue to offer free access, but this will either be for an experimental or promotional period, to selected samples or parts of the full journals.

Electronic-only journals, especially where they are produced outside a commercial framework, would appear to have a better chance of providing a full service free of charge, but this is misleading. Some good journals are being produced at very low cost, but this could not scale to support the publication of all scholarly papers. It is not realistic to expect the necessary people to work, long term, on these journals at no cost and achieve the required standard or quality. There will be a cost, even if it is substantially lower than the cost of producing paper journals, and ways must be found to cover it.

Apart from page charges, Table 4 shows some electronic-only journals supported by research or educational grants, and some by appropriate associations or societies, but by its nature this type of funding is often short-term, and the gap still has to be filled. A popular idea is for the non-commercial producer to liaise with a commercial publisher to publish an annual compilation of online papers, on CD-ROM or even as a bound paper volume. Reverting to paper seems to be a backward step for electronic-only journals, and the market for CD-ROM collections of 'old' papers is unproven: there is obvious archival value, but not at the price level of current journal subscriptions. One publisher, Priory Lodge Education, hopes to generate sufficient advertising or sponsorship to support its online medical journals. This may be feasible in the medical field, but it is unlikely that online journals could generate advertising in fields where none existed before.

The danger for electronic-only journals is the proportion of current journals, just under half, that have no officially stated way of raising any funds. This could become destabilising for this type of journal, and viable solutions must be arranged if new electronic-only journals are not to be discouraged, particularly in view of the healthier financial state of subscription-based journals. For many, though, this type of funding is not the objective, and subscription journals equally face the severe problem of the worldwide library funding crisis (Okerson 1992).

Experimenting with the structure of journals

Another way in which online journals could diverge from paper journals is in their structure and frequency of publication. Papers can appear online as fast as they can be editorially approved, or instantly if preprints are accepted, rather than in periodic bundles, and the number of papers made available is constrained, if at all, by quality criteria rather than page limits. There is the opportunity to develop more broadly-based journals, reversing the process of fragmentation that has in recent times dominated new paper journal publishing.

Two journals are worth noting in this respect. The Journal of Universal Computer Science takes a highly broad-brush approach to its subject. Whether this is useful remains to be seen, but it seems likely that more targetted strategies will be necessary. A more promising approach involves what the editors call 'multiple virtual journals'. InterJournal is a number of interlocking journals on different subjects to which papers can be submitted simultaneously. The interrelated subject areas - currently complex systems, polymers and complex fluids, and genetics - are all part of the same global hierarchy and all manuscript information is stored in a common database (Redi and Bar-Yam 1995). Given the small number of submitted papers, the journal has yet to demonstrate that the idea has wide support.

Online journal awareness services

With the expanding number of online journals and readers new to online access, how can resources, especially new journals, be discovered reliably? Are online journals easy to find? Yes they are, providing the searcher is aware a journal exists, especially if they are available over the Web. If not, and this particularly affects new electronic-only journals rather than electronic editions, the range and growing sophistication of the now largely commercialized Web search services may provide some answers, but these searches are dependent on the user's query and keyword selection. An alternative is to subscribe to, typically electronic mail-based, alerting services, but this option would involve a high information overhead for a user with specialised interests.

Perhaps the best option is to check one of the numerous journal lists that are available on the Web, and these provided links to many of the journals included in the survey. Although a number of lists and alerting services were monitored for relevant journals before and during the period of the survey, none was found to include all the journals discovered, with the best 'hit rate' above 60 per cent and the lowest below 20 per cent, even though for most lists the scope is broader than that adopted here. This reflects the methods of information collection and the selection criteria used by each list, many of which are run by individuals within a library service, rather than any inherent or long-term limitation of such services, but there are implications for marketing and launching online journals.

Not surprisingly, because one of its category listings is 'electronic journals, STM (peer reviewed)', the WWW virtual library service produced by E-doc includes by a long way the highest number of titles reaching the criteria of this survey. The listing from the previous edition of this directory included fewer than half of the titles in the survey, indicating the problem of hardcopy sources keeping up with online developments. A more up-to-date source is the NewJour Internet list, an almost daily free email alerting service which now has a comprehensive Web archive. Table 5 lists the journal directories visited for the survey, in order of hit rate, and indicates the general likelihood of finding STM journal titles from these sources. The full, alphabetical list of journal titles included in this survey are shown in Table 6.

Until a list of journals can approach a 100 per cent hit rate all the time, a common misunderstanding about 'marketing' new journals on the Web must be addressed. Marketing has two purposes: to raise awareness of a product, and to promote sales. On the first, it has been suggested that awareness of a product can be generated almost automatically by virtue of its presence on the Web. The tools that have emerged to support the Internet - notification services such as discussion groups or listservs through email, or newsgroups; Internet search tools such as Archie, Veronica, and Wide Area Information System (WAIS); or the Web search engines such as Lycos, WebCrawler or Alta Vista; and features such as hypertext links - taken together surpass by some margin conventional methods for raising awareness of products. Even on the Internet, however, it is seen above that no single information service for journals is complete, currently. More comprehensive services will develop, but they will depend on editors and publishers using and informing these services rather than relying on automatic Web 'robots'.

Conclusion

Some major publishers, those that have resolved what they expect to be an acceptable way of charging for electronic editions of existing paper journals, are about to move surprisingly quickly to make these journals available online. Innovation is not confined to the major players, however, and the survey has found some of the state-of-the-art online journals being produced by smaller, independent groups.

Some electronic-only journals are beginning to demonstrate and exploit the potential of the new medium. The next stage should see real examples of multimedia enhancements involving sound, video and simulations, particularly in the fields of biology and medicine. The SuperJournal project (1995), which involves over 20 publishers in the UK, is addressing the integration of multimedia content within scholarly journals. Enhanced hypermedia links will proliferate through the use of 'open' link services that separate link and document data, removing the dependence for link creation on the original author, an important feature for widely available and archival journals (Open Journal Project 1995).

Ironically, the third key feature of online journals, the 'scholarly skywriting' type of interactivity, is already supported by the technical infrastructure but may have to await new publishing strategies providing enhanced accessibility before it can become widely practised within scholarly journals.

Formatting of technical material, especially maths and tables, in online journals should improve with the appearance of the specification for html 3.0 (HTML working group of the Internet Engineering Task Force 1995), while more sophisticated screen-based page design, layout and multimedia integration and delivery will be supported by interfaces such as Netscape 2.0 (Netscape Communications 1995) and Microsoft Internet Studio (Microsoft Corp. 1995).

Then there is Sun's Java interface, which has the potential to add defining features to online publications. Essentially a 'computer within a computer', Java may become a universal operating system (Singleton 1996), enhancing usability by hiding incompatibilities between different computer platforms. Java will bring new features to online publications, enabling 1000s of tiny programs or 'applets' to be shared securely over the Web and adding, for example, animations and spreadsheets that analyse incoming data to otherwise static pages.

After the false dawn in the mid-1980s of desk-top 'publishing', which really presaged desk-top production, the combination of these interfaces with the online distribution capability of services such as the Web heralds a genuine capability for cost-effective small-scale publishing. The financial instability and muted impact of small-scale, independent electronic-only journals in this survey, however, suggests that a wider network of support services and professional production, if not the support of established commercial publishers, will continue to be necessary to maintain scholarly publishing at its present scale.

The immediate future of online journals is set to be dominated by electronic editions based on established paper journals and retaining the appearance of familiar paper layouts through Adobe Acrobat. The innovative features made possible by online publishing may therefore be obscured for a time. Their emergence on a large scale will depend on whether electronic editions can evolve to become electronic-only journals, or on the commitment of the scholarly community to demand these features through the development of new journals, producers and publishing structures.

How to Use the Journals and Newsletters Directory

Introduction to the Electronic Journals and Newsletters Directory

This is a brief introduction to the layout and use of the Directory, including the format, how to access electronic journals and retrieve back issues, and how to use the FTP protocol, Gopher, list software and the World Wide Web (WWW). Greater detail about these tools is available in "how to" works on the Internet itself or the many comprehensive guidebooks that are increasingly available in bookstores and libraries.

An abridged version of the Directory is available on the ARL Gopher. To access the gopher edition, point your gopher client to `arl.cni.org` and then choose the Scholarly Communication menu option. The URL is <gopher://arl.cni.org:70/11/scomm/edir>.

Format of the Journals and Newsletters Directory

Only those fields that contain information appear in the Directory, so not all fields appear in all entries.

Note that all email addresses in the Directory are on the Internet unless otherwise specified. FTP archives are accessed with the user name "anonymous" and your email address as password.

An asterisk (*) next to a title means that although we have verified that the e-serial exists, we were unable to reach the editors to update last year's Directory listing. Accordingly, we have re-used or adapted the 1995 listing.

Network-based e-serials are generally accessed through the following means:

- World Wide Web
- LISTSERV and similar automatic programs that process subscription commands
- USENET news groups
- FTP retrieval
- Gopher
- E-mail message to the publisher or editor who manually adds your name to a distribution list or forwards back issues.

Retrieving E-Serials via World Wide Web (WWW)

In this year's edition, over ninety percent of the e-serials listed are available via the World Wide Web. For the user, this means that most of the titles in the Directory are accessible using a Web browser, such as Netscape, Mosaic or the text-based Lynx. The address is cited as the URL (Uniform Resource Locator). Generally speaking, entering the URL into the interface provided by the browser will bring up a home page for the e-serial.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

The format of a URL is as follows:

service://hostname:port/directory/filename

For example, the URL for the ARL home page on the Web is:

http://arl.cni.org/index.html

Subscribing to E-serials via List Software

Each entry has a section titled "Subs/Access" that looks something like this:

Subs/Access: email: `listserv@<hostname>` message: `SUBSCRIBE <listname> <your name>`, where `<hostname>` is the name of the host computer, `<listname>` is the name of the e-serial (e.g., catalyst) and `<your name>` is the user's name (e.g., Jane Doe).

Users must send the command `SUBSCRIBE <listname>` and their full name (first and last name) to the LISTSERV address. Some list software will not accept a subscription unless the user's name is included. This command must be sent in the body of the mail message. The subject line should be left blank.

To unsubscribe from a LISTSERV based e-serial, use either the command `UNSUB` or `SIGNOFF` from the email account that was used to subscribe.

Retrieving Back Issues

Back issues are usually accessible via the WWW, FTP, Gopher or list software. A LISTSERV-based e-serial has the following type of entry:

Back issues: email: `<hostname>` message: `INDEX <listname>`

To retrieve a list of available back issues, email the command `INDEX <listname>` to the LISTSERV address. The subject line should be left blank. The `INDEX` command will retrieve a file that lists all available back issues and documents. These files are retrieved in the same manner, by sending the command `GET <file name>` to the LISTSERV address.

There are several different list software products in use on the Internet, each with a slightly different command syntax. Some of the more popular applications are LISTSERV, listproc and majordomo. When using a particular list software for the first time, send the command `HELP` to the LISTSERV address for more information.

Retrieving E-Serials via FTP

FTP (File Transfer Protocol) is used on the Internet to transfer files from one computer to another. On the Internet, there are hundreds of thousands of files and programs that reside on FTP fileservers. To FTP a file or a program from a fileserver it is necessary to know the domain name (node) of the system from which the file is to be transferred, the directory the file is in, and the name of the file. If one imagines the Net as a building full of filing cabinets, then using FTP is like going to a particular filing cabinet (a node), opening one drawer (directory) at a time, searching through the files in the drawer and taking home one or more of these files (documents, programs, sound recordings, photographs, graphic images, entire books, almost anything).

FTP sessions have three basic stages:

Connecting to a remote host (computer);
Changing to the desired directory; and Retrieving files.

FTP software varies slightly throughout the Net. If the following instructions prove unhelpful, enter the command `HELP` or `?` for more information once the FTP session has started.

In most cases, one starts a session simply by entering `ftp <hostname>` at the system prompt. Consult local system manuals and support staff if more direction is needed.

A node (host) generally refers to any computer that can be accessed from either a local terminal or a remote computer. Nodes are also referred to as network servers or hosts. Node addresses can take the form of a series of either letters or the IP address itself, which is a set of numbers separated by periods. An example might be: `mrcnext.cso.uiuc.edu` or `128.174.201.12`.

Because of the preponderance of Web sites, we have used the URL for ftp sites wherever possible. For example:

> Back issues: `ftp://borg.lib.vt.edu/pub/CATALYST/`
> The node address is `borg.lib.vt.edu`. The directory is `/pub/CATALYST/`.
> No file name is given in this example.

When asked for a login, type "`anonymous`." The required password is your complete email address. Note that on the vast majority of systems, directory and file names are case sensitive and must be typed exactly as they appear.

The command "`cd`" means "`change directory`." Once you have moved to the desired directory, enter the command "`ls`" to see what files are archived there. To get file names as well as their size (in bytes) and the date they were archived, enter the command "`list`" or "`dir`."

To retrieve a single file, type: `get <filename>` at the ftp prompt; to retrieve multiple files, type: `mget <filenames>`. As in DOS, a * can be used as a wild card to retrieve multiple files.

Retrieving E-Serials via Gopher

If the system you use to access the Internet has a gopher client installed, you can type `gopher <hostname>` at your system prompt to access that particular gopher menu. If there is no gopher client installed (type "`gopher`" at the system prompt to see if there is a client installed), then you can telnet to a public gopher, login as gopher, and by choosing "All the gopher servers in the world" you can find the gopher you want.

However, gopher sites can also be accessed using a Web browser. For this reason, we have included the URL for gopher sites wherever possible. Please note that a complete URL is necessary for a Web browser to access a gopher site. The following is an example of a complete URL:

gopher://arl.cni.org:70/11/scomm/edir

If the complete URL is not listed, you will need to use a gopher client. Some public gopher sites are:

consultant.micro.umn.edu
gopher.msu.edu (35.8.2.61)

15 ACLU Cyber-Liberties Update The ACLU Cyber-Liberties Update is a bi-weekly e-zine on cyber-liberties cases and controversies at the state and federal level. The newsletter informs citizens across the country of the latest developments in the emerging debate over issues of privacy, free speech, and access rights in the new information age. It provides up-to-date information and analyses of federal and state initiatives seeking to restrict civil liberties in cyberspace, and makes calls for citizen-led actions. The ACLU, the nation's oldest and largest defender of civil liberties and civil rights, is the only organization monitoring online censorship issues in all fifty states, as well as at the federal level. With the expertise and resources of affiliate offices around the country, the ACLU works to promote the rights of citizens in cyberspace through public education, policy analysis, and litigation.

Submissions should follow either the APA or MLA guidelines. They should be in electronic format: standard ASCII, 60-65 characters per line. Single-spaced. Paragraphs should be separated by a blank line (double carriage returns). Maximum Length: approximately 5,000 to 10,000 words. (Longer submissions may be considered.) Either the MLA or the APA style sheet should be followed. The author should include an abstract of the article and a brief (ca. six to ten lines) bio, which includes academic degrees, institutional affiliations, discipline/department roles, as well as other information that may be useful to the readers of the journal. The bio may need to be revised for uniformity.

117 Behavioural and Brain Sciences Behavioral and Brain Sciences (BBS) is an international, interdisciplinary journal of "open peer commentary" published by Cambridge University Press, with its editorial office in Southampton and New York. BBS publishes important and controversial interdisciplinary articles in psychology, neuroscience, behavioral biology, cognitive science, artificial intelligence, linguistics and philosophy. Articles are rigorously refereed and, if accepted, are circulated to a large number of potential commentators around the world in the various specialties on which the article impinges. Their 1,000-word commentaries are then co-published with the target article as well as the author's response to each. The commentaries consist of analyses, elaborations, complementary and supplementary data and theory, criticisms and cross-specialty syntheses.

133 Bleeding Eye A contemporary journal. We envision a platform for expression and experimentation that will eventually encompass a realm of expression that will include art, design, animation, poetry, humor, prose, opinion, fantasy, resources, links, news, views, and reviews. This may expand or even contract depending on how the journal grows and evolves. Our editor believes that such a journal is almost organic and should be managed as a loving gardner would maintain a garden.

147 Bright Lights Film Journal Bright Lights Film Journal is a glossy, popular-academic hybrid of movie analysis, history, and commentary covering classic, commercial, independent, exploitation, and international films from a wide range of vantage points from the aesthetic to the political. A prime area of focus is on the connection between capitalist society and the images that reflect, support, or subvert it—movies as propaganda. Written by curdled critics and excitable academics.

153 Bryn Mawr Reviews Bryn Mawr Reviews is an umbrella title that comprises at present two e-journals supplying reviews of current scholarly literature in discrete fields of the humanities. It is our hope that the umbrella will eventually encompass additional titles. Each distinct journal distributes by email book reviews of current work in its field. We also ship a limited number of related items of interest (conference announcements, news bulletins, columns of comment related to the focus of the journal), and we encourage multiple reviews, responses to reviews by authors reviewed, and other innovative approaches. Subscribers may elect BMCR alone or BMMR alone, but if they wish to receive both without duplication, they should subscribe to the BMR list. HTML version and other enhancements scheduled for 1995/96.

158 Bulletin of the Interest Group of Pure and Applied Logics (IGPL) The Bulletin is the official publication of the International Interest Group in Pure and Applied Logics (IGPL), which is sponsored by The European Foundation for Logic, Language and Information (FoLLI). FoLLI currently has a membership of over 800 researchers in various aspects of logic (symbolic, computational, mathematical, philosophical, etc.) from all over the world. It is the first scientific journal on logic where publication is fully electronic: submission, refereeing, revising, typesetting, checking proofs, and publishing, all is done via electronic mailing and electronic publishing. The Bulletin is an attempt to solve the problem of long delays and large backlogs in publication of papers in current journals in the logic (in particular, IGPL) community.

176 Catalyst; The Community Services Catalyst A refereed print journal serving community college educators for over twenty years, Catalyst is now also distributed electronically via the Scholarly Communications Project of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Catalyst is the second oldest continuously published journal in the community college field with practictioner-oriented articles on practices in continuing and community education as delivered by community colleges, including papers on research in the field. Currently distributed in print to dues-paying members as a benefit of membership. Electronic subscribers, in addition to having access to past issues of the journal, receive tables of contents as issues are published; subscribers then may order full texts by electronic mail from their own computers of any and all articles they wish to read. Catalyst is available in microfilm and microfiche from University Microfilms International. Initiated in 1971.

199 Classical and Quantum Gravity Online Electronic version of the highly-regarded international peer-reviewed journal. Articles are available online several weeks before the printed version. All users can read author and title information and search abstracts. Registered users can view abstracts, TEX or LATEX versions of the articles and download all figures. Registration is free to anyone on a site with a library subscription to the journal. Registration forms are available from the Institute of Physics Publishing. This popular service has been widely praised for its ease of use. In 1996, the Institute of Physics Publishing expects to make some major improvements to the service thanks to advances in WWW technology. See Institute of Physics Publishing.

212 Commodore Hacking Commodore Hacking is an online magazine that covers technical programming on all Commodore 8-bit computers, with emphasis on the CBM 64 and CBM 128 machines. Articles typically include commented assembly language source code or complete schematics. Described as one of the most technical publications available for the Commodore systems, Commodore Hacking is a magazine for the entire Commodore community. The magazine contains articles submitted by noted personalities on the Internet and other networks, and the entire publication is made available on the Internet and other networks free of charge to all readers. Past articles have covered subjects as diverse as burst reading on the 1571 and 1581 drives, reading IBM disks on the Commodore 128, memory management, and graphical demo techniques. Although geared towards the intermediate to advanced programmer and hardware designer, articles are presented in a format that can be understood by beginners.

217 Complexity International Complexity International is a hypermedia journal for complex systems research. Articles are peer reviewed in the usual way, but are published via the World Wide Web, instead of in paper form. The theme of the journal is the field of complex systems, the generation of complex behaviour from the interaction of multiple parallel processes. Relevant topics include (but are not restricted to) artificial life, cellular automata, chaos theory, control theory, evolutionary programming, fractals, genetic algorithms, information systems, neural networks, non-linear dynamics, and parallel computation. Papers dealing with applications of these topics (e.g. to biology, economics, epidemiology, sociology) are also encouraged.

254 Critical Mass Critical Mass began as an experimental project by six communications students at Simon Fraser University in the summer of 1995. Although the e-zine has been taken over by six new Communication enthusiasts the objectives of Critical Mass will not change. The e-zine still intends to offer a Canadian perspective on mass communication issues while serving as a forum for discussion in these issues as well. C-Mass will also attempt to address as broad an audience as possible by encouraging media literacy at all ages, and by bringing students and educators together from around the globe to discuss pertinent topics. Of course, the primary objective of Critical Mass is to explore the potential of the WWW as a communication and publication medium.

256 Cropduster Cropduster (est. 1992) appears periodically as a reaction to the kind of society that some of us live in. It is a knee-jerk response to the fact that our world produces cultural underachievers. Cropduster has so far produced various reviews and critiques of some of the lesser known aspects of people and places that teeter-totter on barely breaking even. The zine is an overseer of this as well as a product of it, because the thing itself exhibits too many of the traits it condemns: lack of rigor, unfair attacks, vendettas, revisionism, stubbornness, spelling mistakes, and vulgarity.

307 CyberStage Online CyberStage examines the use of technology by new and traditional artists, and also the emerging artistic sensibilities that are working their way into the development of new media. Looking at electronic art, we support ongoing discourse by profiling artists, looking at relevant issues, encouraging debate, and keeping people up to date with the latest work happening in the field. In doing so, we show some of the most exciting work happening in this field.

353 e-tour An East London based arts, culture, politics and listings magazine. e-tour aims to reflect the diversity of local people and their production, relating their experiences and concerns to those of communities across the world. Although this magazine is local in immediate concern, our longer term aim is to link up as far as possible with publications, writers and artists across the world, finding commonalities of experience and interest. Local should not equate with parochial. We aim to be visually arresting, and our writing style is lively, analytical and humourous.

378 Electronic Journal of Analytic Philosophy Established in August 1993, the Electronic Journal of Analytic Philosophy is the first electronic journal in philosophy. EJAP is available free to an international audience on the Internet and World Wide Web. The editors understand analytic philosophy as characterized by a free use of formal methods, a close relationship with the natural and social sciences, and an incremental approach to problem solving. EJAP's mission is to strengthen analytic philosophy by examining it at its most vulnerable points, drawing attention to areas of philosophical research previously neglected by analytic philosophy. To this end, EJAP publishes bi-yearly issues on topics of special concern to analytic philosophers.

387 Electronic Journal of Strategic Information Systems SIS-EJOURNAL aims to encourage, advance, and communicate interdisciplinary thinking in the field of strategic information systems by means of fast electronic publication. Through its rapid publication, SIS-EJOURNAL offers workers in this field ready reference to one another's published ideas, online access, and easy retrieval of timely information. Once contributions are accepted, SIS-EJOURNAL publishes them without delay. Each contribution is published individually and sent out immediately after acceptance by the reviewers. Every five contributions comprise one issue, and each year's issues comprise one volume.

393 Electronic Transactions on Numerical Analysis Electronic Transactions on Numerical Analysis (ETNA) is an electronic journal for the publication of significant new and important developments in numerical analysis and scientific computing. Papers of the highest quality that deal with the analysis of algorithms for the solution of continuous models and numerical linear algebra are appropriate for ETNA, as are papers of similar quality that discuss implementation and performance of such algorithms. New algorithms for current or new computer architectures are appropriate, provided they are numerically sound. However, the focus of the publication should be on the algorithm rather than on the architecture.

508 Idea Central Idea Central, part of The Electronic Policy Network, is an electronic magazine composed of a series of topical Web pages that serve as pathfinders in particular areas of interest, highlighting the most important recent items available from EPN members and other sources. Idea Central covers topics such as economics and politics (edited by columnists Richard Rothstein and Robert Kuttner), welfare and families, and health policy, civic participation, media, education, and environmental policy. Each of the Idea Central pages is, in effect, a magazine in its own right. The flexibility of the technology will allow the EPN to adapt the topical pages to different audiences and ultimately even to customize them to reflect individual preferences.

520 In Motion magazine In Motion magazine is a multicultural, English/Spanish, online U.S. publication that promotes grassroots organizing and politics, as well as art for social change among communities of color and working people. In Motion magazine encourages and invites contributions. In Motion magazine also includes a folder specifically to generate ongoing discussions about issues of concerns to its readers, a discussion that can be lively and current with the use of e-mail. As the level of input calls for it, a bulletin board will be attached to the publication to further encourage this discussion.

553 International Journal of Tantric Studies This journal was primarily established to publish Sanskrit Tantras (or Agamas or Samhitas) scholarly topics concerning one or more parts (pada or pitha) of kriya, vidya or jnana, yoga, and carya. Special attention is paid to the Trika schools of Kashmir. This includes the philosophy of language, knowledge, aesthetics, rhetorics, etc. (e.g. Abhinavagupta's commentary on the Dhvanyaloka of Anandavardhana). It also includes, for example, architectural Tantric-based items, stotras, papers on Tantric authors, medicine, chemistry, astronomy/astrology, and the history of Tantrism.

566 Interpersonal Computing and Technology; An Electronic Journal for the 21st Century There are currently several barriers to the use of electronic journals as outlets for scholarly research. These include copyright, the problem of coordinating with print publication, and especially the validation of the electronic journal as a legitimate outlet for dissemination of scholarly studies suitable for credit toward promotion and tenure. IPCT addresses these concerns. Each journal issue will be the equivalent of 64 print pages. Coordinated with and issued through the IPCT-L, a list operated at Georgetown University, which will serve as the initial readership. Subscribers to the list will be considered charter subscribers. No charge for the service for the first year. Subscribers will be urged to comment extensively on content and format of the journal. After an experimental year, IPCTJ will commence library collaboration and may find it necessary to charge for the service.

574 IOUDAIOS Review IOUDAIOS Review is the serial electronic publication of IOUDAIOS-L@LEHIGH.EDU, the international electronic forum for scholarship on Early Judaism and Christian origins. IOUDAIOS Review began life in July 1991 at York University in Toronto, largely as the result of conversations between Larry Hurtado (U. of Manitoba) and Steve Mason (York U.) identifying the need for speedy and in-depth reviews of scholarship in the field, and seeing electronic publishing as a means to that end. The chronological span covered by IOUDAIOS Review extends roughly from the time of Ezra (4th c. BCE) up to the flowering of rabbinic Judaism about the time of the Mishna (3rd c. CE).

602 Journal of Criminal Justice and Popular Culture The Journal of Criminal Justice and Popular Culture aims to serve the criminal justice/criminological community by publishing critical review essays that take as their subject some variant of popular culture, including, but not limited to, films, documentaries, books, plays, lyrics/music, paintings, photography, and computer programs/video games. In addition, JCJPC also publishes original manuscripts that attend to the intersection of popular culture and criminal justice. Review essays are intended to explore the depiction of criminal justice issues in the various forms of popular culture, providing educators with suggestions for utilizing these mediums as pedagogical tools and others with ideas about how these forms may be gainfully employed in research efforts. Manuscripts may be theoretical or empirical, but they are expected to highlight and focus on the interplay of popular culture and criminal justice in all dimensions of society.

663 Kyosaku A quarterly publication dedicated to fostering a healthy zeal for poetry, humor, beauty, and life in an age when many are all too prepared to shove Art's fat ass out the door and curl up with dopey New Age shinola or turn on Hard Copy. We at Kyoskau are convinced that by funneling our piss and vinegar into a digest-sized compendium of the best poetry, prose, and art we can gather, we can slowly chop away at the sturdy stump of Apathy and Convention until the putrid tree tumbles like a statue of a fallen figurehead. Artistic rebellion is the least blatant but most gratifying means of spitting on society's shoes.

673 Liberal Avenger Whatever your political alignment, the Liberal Avenger will satisfy your craving for intelligent discussion of current affairs. The Avenger, AKA Brian MacKenzie, is a brilliant, passionate, and often hilarious observer of the American political landscape. His essays are invariably entertaining and enlightening. Although a liberal Democrat, he doesn't always toe the party line. He follows wherever his intellect and his convictions lead him; his writings are firmly rooted in reason, compassion and an uncompromising sense of justice.

695 Mathematical Physics Electronic Journal The intention of the journal is to publish papers in mathematical physics and related areas that are of the highest possible quality. Research papers and review articles are selected through a normal refereeing process, overseen by an editorial board. The research subjects will be primarily on mathematical physics; but this should not be interpreted as a limitation, as the editors feel that essentially all subjects of mathematics and physics are in principle relevant to mathematical physics.

698 Matrix Maps Quarterly Matrix Maps Quarterly (MMQ) is a publication for maps of computer networks. The purpose of MMQ is to show in maps features of networks that are difficult to present with text or numbers alone. Color makes direct comparisons between networks or sizes easy to see. We also include tables, graphs, figures, and text, and often the underlying numbers and names. MMQ shows and describes network sizes and locations, in hosts, servers, users, and other units, correlated by population, personal income, and other factors relevant to geographic, economic, and demographic analysis and graphical presentation of computer networks.

Submissions: MFS invites the submission of articles offering historical, interdisciplinary, theoretical, and cultural approaches to modern and contemporary narrative. Authors should submit three paper copies of the manuscript, or an IBM-compatible floppy disk and two hard copies. Please designate the word processing program used on the disk. A self-addressed, stamped envelope should accompany all submissions. Because essays sent out to advisory editors are evaluated anonymously, the author's name and address should appear only on the cover sheet of the manuscript. Manuscripts should conform to the latest edition of the MLA Handbook. MFS welcomes the submission of illustrations. Photocopies are acceptable for first review, but high quality glossy print or camera-ready reproductions should accompany the final manuscript. Authors are responsible for obtaining copyright permissions. Send to: Patrick O'Donnell, Editor, MFS, Department of English, Purdue University, West Lafayette, IN 47907-1389. 717 mini-Annals of Improbable Research, The ("mini-AIR") A monthly supplement to The Annals of Improbable Research (AIR), the journal of inflated research and personalities published by the MIT Museum. The Annals of Improbable Research (AIR) is a splendid educational magazine produced by the entire former editorial staff (1955-1994) of The Journal of Irreproducible Results. AIR's co-founders are Marc Abrahams, who edited the journal from 1990-1994, and Alexander Kohn, who founded the journal in 1955 and was its editor until 1989. AIR's editorial board consists of more than 40 distinguished scientists from around the world, including eight Nobel Laureates and a convicted felon. Each October, AIR produces the Ig Nobel Prize Ceremony at Harvard, honoring people whose achievements cannot or should not be reproduced. The Annals of Improbable Research is in no way associated with the name The Journal of Irreproducible Results or with the publisher of The Journal of Irreproducible Results.

721 MNJ2 (formerly the Mac Net Journal) Mac Net Journal is a Zine dedicated to helping Macintosh users make the most of the Macintosh and their Net connections. It contains reviews of shareware and other downloadable software available to Macintosh users, articles about the Internet (how to best use it, what's new with it, and other information), as well as articles about the Macintosh, its future, and maximizing its potential. Articles are written in plain, non-hyper-technical language, aiming to be informative and interesting while still being understandable. We often cover step-by-step instructions in our how-to articles.

730 Monitors: A Journal of Human Rights and Technology As far as we are aware this journal is the first to encourage both activist and academic approaches to the broad concerns of human rights by focusing specifically on the impact of technological advance. Monitors is intended to fill a gap in contemporary human rights scholarship (understood as a mix of theory and practice) by using new information technologies to analyze the various forms of oppression/repression and human rights violations that have always accompanied the advancement of technology. Monitors will be a forum where the medium of the World Wide Web itself connects and enables the changing nature of information, documentation, activism, and human rights.

The journal's primary purpose is to disseminate information and ideas about law and sexual orientation in an efficient and timely manner, but without duplicating the recent inclusion of articles on sexual orientation in traditional law reviews. The journal specializes in four distinct types of works: (1) reports and studies germane to gay and lesbian legal issues, (2) transcriptions of proceedings, panels and programs, (3) briefs filed by litigators around the country in key cases, and (4) essays, student work and other forms of traditional law review scholarship which, due to space limitations, may not be published in traditional reviews and journals.

772 Nordic Journal of Philosophical Logic (NJPL) NJPL is a forum for researchers and graduate students in the field of philosophical logic, with special focus on activities in the Nordic countries. The journal will be published both in hard copy and electronically. Around this core activity, we will be offering communication services—mailing lists, newsgroups, and (eventually) live discussion groups. We hope to make NJPL a point of reference for philosophical logic on the Internet, where people come both to read articles and to communicate with each other.

789 One First published in January of 1993 as a bi-monthly over-sized tabloid publication distributed in the Washington, DC area. It was originally created as a generational response to traditional Black-oriented newspapers and magazines which we thought failed to meet the needs of a younger generation of African Americans. In the first issue we used these words, "One is a forum, a trading post for writers and thinkers to exchange dialogue on the defining issue of a generation – unity, diversity, economic self-sufficiency, intellectual freedom, race, class and gender – without fear of censorship. And to discuss the life-sustaining, spirit-fulfilling, mind-expanding elements of Black culture – our music, our art, our faith. A local magazine with a world vision. A chronicle of progressive Black politics and culture that will fuse a diverse body of thought into one cohesive agenda: freedom of expression.".

794 Online Journal of Ethics The Online Journal of Ethics explores both theoretical and applied ethical issues involved in the practice of business and the professions. We welcome submissions on theoretical topics such as the character and extent of social responsibility of business and the professions, the nature of the professions, and the relation between business/professional ethics and other ethics (Kantian, virtue, utilitarian, etc.). The journal also publishes papers that address pressing ethical issues in a more topical fashion. Such topics would include, e.g., the ethics of diversity training programs, downsizing initiatives, various pre-employment screening methods, empowerment, total quality management, different technologies used by corporations, and leadership, among other ideas. The journal is an interactive mechanism which allows readers to submit comments relating to the issues presented in a particular article to the editorial staff using a submission form at the beginning of the article. Editorial staff will post comments back to the web site so that they may be read by other visitors to the site. The journal will publish two issues per year, with periodic updates to the site.

796 Online Modern History Review The editors welcome scholarly articles on any historical subject (European, Asian, North and South American, African, etc.). In addition, the editors welcome book reviews, open forum articles, primary and secondary historical documents in electronic form, images (gif, pcx, tiff, bmp), M.A. and Ph.D. dissertations, notice of academic positions and appointments, publications and grants. Reviewers consider the following questions when assessing manuscripts: Is the writer's thesis clear? Are counter arguments mentioned and debated? Is the writer aware of the current research on the subject? Is the manuscript well-organized and logical? Is the writer conscious of his audience?

808 paperplates A literary quarterly published in Toronto, paperplates is as open to polemics as it is to poetry, to recipes as it is to reviews (film, television, theatre, music, books). Each issue tries to promote a little of the picnic spirit, a love of the ephemeral. Nothing so clearly distinguishes paperplates as its willingness to publish, side by side, the unassuming and the ambitious. Like its namesake, it will hold everything that's digestible (and not just potato salad).

810 Pathfinder A Web site created by a group of us at Time Inc. We're doing this because, like many people on the Net, we want to explore. Our goal is to see what new ways we can find to inform and be informed, entertain and be entertained. Our e-mail addresses are listed on the site, so please tell us what you think and offer up suggestions. At the moment, we have only a small sample of our products on this Web site, most notably TIME, Vibe, Time Warner Electronic Publishing, People, Entertainment Weekly, Sports Illustrated, and a place called the Virtual Garden. Soon we will have more content, since our colleagues at our other magazines are eager to join us. Let us know what you'd like to see come on next. As for the name Pathfinder, it's meant to suggest an adventure into unknown territory, but with some guidance – like a compass, or even people who've been there before.

834 Physics Express Letters Physics Express Letters contains all the letters from 11 of the Institute of Physics Publishing's leading journals. Complete articles are available and include full mathematics, figures and tables. Physics Express Letters makes letters and rapid communications available faster than traditional publication and to a far wider audience. In the first two months of operation, this service has outstripped its target for 1995 and continues to grow rapidly. New articles are added every week and the service is extremely easy to use.

844 Plexus Plexus is an online gallery, a journal, and a selected archive of art, video, criticism, theory, poetry and literature. The site is always under construction, as it is frequently updated with new works from artists and writers. Plexus takes as its inception E.M. Forster's advice "Only connect. . ." and will seek to make an apposition of art and ideas that have stemmed from different cultures and belief systems. Although Forster foresaw, when he wrote "The Machine Stops" in 1908, a humanity dominated and physically separated by the machine, Plexus will endeavour to further the most positive aspects of the computer age, as an enhancement of human communication and intercultural understanding. We see the Internet as a vast and ever expanding library of human culture, and it is our ambition to add a few volumes to its shelves as testimony of our contemporaries experience and creativity.

This magazine presents a unique view of the world through satire and political commentary. Articles are included that cover road trips, rambling social commentary, member updates, humorous articles stolen from elsewhere on the Net, and serious political debate on timely issues. The PPSA Online Magazine reflects the thoughts, ideas and sense of humor of its membership. Comments and articles are welcome! PPSA is a non-profit organization and donations are accepted.

Target article length should normally not exceed 500 lines [c. 4500 words]. Commentaries and responses should not exceed 200 lines [c. 1800 words]. All target articles, commentaries and responses must have (1) a short abstract (up to 100 words for target articles, shorter for commentaries and responses), (2) an indexable title, (3) the authors' full name(s) and institutional address(es). In addition, for target articles only: (4) 6-8 indexable keywords, (5) a separate statement of the authors' rationale for soliciting commentary (e.g., why would commentary be useful and of interest to the field? what kind of commentary do you expect to elicit?) and (6) a list of potential commentators (with their email addresses). All paragraphs should be numbered in articles, commentaries and responses (see format of already published articles in the PSYCOLOQUY archive; line length should be < 80 characters, no hyphenation). It is strongly recommended that all figures be designed so as to be screen-readable ASCII. If this is not possible, the provisional solution is the less desirable hybrid one of submitting them as PostScript files (or in some other universally available format) to be printed out locally by readers to supplement the screen-readable text of the article. Postal and fax submissions not accepted.

880 Red Dog Journal, The The Anthology of the Imagination includes poetry and prose of all genres (science fiction, speculative, mainsteam, and experimental), essays of new thought in various fields such as politics and science, examples of the work of visual artists, sound files of authors reading their works. Plans are underway as of June 1995 to eventually include MPEG files as well. The publication focuses primarily on local Phoenix artists and authors but also includes work by people from around the U.S.; some of this work is compiled via the Internet and email. The Dog is also produced in a limited-edition print version which is published quarterly and distributed for free in Phoenix. This version is available by U.S. mail at a cost of $4 per issue.

886 RhetNet, a cyberjournal for rhetoric and writing An effort to adapt the functions of academic print journals to the new environment. Journals simultaneously serve as the medium of conversation and the repository for knowledge. RhetNet serves those purposes but takes the shape of its native environment: cyberspace. This project is both radical and conservative. RhetNet provides rhetoric and Internet students and scholars with the means of capturing, contextualizing, searching, and retrieving some of the intriguing and valuable conversations that occur on various parts of the Net, but which currently lie scattered and forgotten in dusty corners of the virtual world. It provides a repository of Net scholarship on rhetoric and writing. We envision it as a decentered organic repository for all the stuff of the Net that is of interest to the rhetoric and writing community, while also including space for various traditional types of scholarly discourse.

932 So It Goes So It Goes. . . is the first WWW digizine devoted exculsively to poetry in all genres, from any submitting poet. This is the main difference between us and other sites. Many sites exist, but most have stringent submission criteria. Other sites only except certain kinds of poetry, or only work from writers within a selected organization. The aim of So It Goes. . . is to help all writers with high quality work achieve an audience that would otherwise go untapped.

933 Social Justice (formerly Bad Haircut) Social Justice, formerly Bad Haircut, was a zine for several years and now it has been reanimated as an electronic magazine (e-zine) for free distribution through the Internet. Part of the impetus for the reanimation of Bad Haircut is the opportunity afforded by this new medium to create bonds of affiliation and solidarity not bounded by geography. Groups like the Institute for Global Communications run Internet servers for the explicit purpose of uniting social justice activists and providing Net access to those marginalized by various societal forces. We find this trend a hopeful by-product of the world's transition into a post-industrial economy. . .and hopefully will ourselves contribute something meaningful to the cyberdialog.

937 Solstice: An Electronic Journal of Geography and Mathematics The purpose of Solstice is to promote interaction between geography and mathematics. Articles in which elements of one discipline are used to shed light on the other are particularly sought. Also welcome are original contributions that are purely geographical or purely mathematical. These may be prefaced (by editor or author) with commentary suggesting directions that might lead toward the desired interaction. Contributed articles will be refereed by geographers and/or mathematicians. Invited articles will be screened by suitable members of the editorial board. IMaGe is open to having authors suggest, and furnish, material for new regular features.

962 Studies in Nonlinear Dynamics and Econometrics (SNDE) The SNDE is formed in recognition that advances in statistics and dynamical systems theory may increase our understanding of economic and financial markets. The journal will seek both theoretical and applied papers that characterize and motivate nonlinear phenomena. Researchers will be encouraged to assist replication of empirical results by providing copies of data and programs online. Algorithms and rapid communications will also be published.

969 Surfaces Surfaces is an interdisciplinary, refereed, electronic journal in the humanities and social sciences and an open international forum oriented towards the reorganization of knowledge in the humanities. The growth of interdisciplinary study in the humanities and the emergence of new areas of inquiry has reached a point that calls into question both traditional thematic comparisons and the pretensions of any one theoretical approach to delimit and dominate a field of study. Surfaces offers immediate publication upon acceptance; opportunity for subsequent revision of articles; articles not limited by length; continuous availability of issues; multilingual publication of essays over time; and letters, comments, and polemics. The forthcoming Noticeboard will allow speedy announcements and inclusion of reports and reviews on intellectual events such as conferences and seminars around the world. Surfaces allows the reader to reproduce, on screen, the format of a printed page. A technical brochure, sent to every subscriber, offers instructions on how to get access to the various services offered by Surfaces. Visual images, film, and TV stills can be published at no extra cost. A full range of diacritical marks can be included.

979 TC: A Journal of Biblical Textual Criticism TC: A Journal of Biblical Textual Criticism is an electronic journal dedicated to the study of the Jewish and Christian biblical texts. Articles on any aspect of the textual criticism of the Jewish and Christian scriptures (including extracanonical and related literature) are welcome, and contributions that transcend the traditional boundary between textual criticism of the Hebrew Bible/Old Testament and New Testament textual criticism are especially encouraged. We would also like to see articles that discuss the relationship between textual criticism and other disciplines. Full-length articles and shorter notes are equally welcome.

985 Technology Update Technology Update is the full text of a column published in the American Bar Association's Law Practice Management magazine. Written by G. Burgess Allison, author of The Lawyer's Guide to the Internet, the column is a news-and-opinion piece that covers computer industry developments and related technologies – especially those that can be expected to have a significant effect within law offices. The primary focus is on popular hardware and software products, with a special emphasis recently on the Internet and related technologies, but it also covers broader-ranging industry developments that influence long-range information technology and planning strategies. The focus is on what's new and interesting, and to be fair, sometimes the interesting part can run just a bit past the norm. Technology Update is the most popular feature in Law Practice Management magazine.

1115 ALCTS Network News (AN2) Timely and comprehensive coverage of items of concern to librarians in collection management, acquisitions, cataloging, serials, preservation, and the reproduction of library materials. Advance copy of articles and features that will appear later in the print publication of the division, the ALCTS Newsletter. Late-breaking news such as ALA Annual and Midwinter conference schedules (including meeting room locations) and reports shortly after the conference of major actions and developments. Also current legislative news, news from the publishing world, candidates for office, and election results. Although some of the content of AN2 is later duplicated by the ALCTS Newsletter, the intent of AN2 is as a current awareness tool for members of ALCTS and others interested in the subject focus of that division.

1116 Amateur Computerist The Amateur Computerist grew out of a battle against the cancellation of computer programming classes for hourly workers at the Ford Motor Company Rouge Factory. The newsletter deals with computer issues and labor issues. The Amateur Computerist is dedicated to support for grassroots efforts like the "computers for the people movement" that gave birth to the personal computer in the '70s and '80s. Articles about these developments have appeared in past issues of the newsletter. Most recently, the newsletter has been documenting the history of the development of the Global Network, of Usenet, and of Unix and the progressive impact of these important breakthroughs.

1180 Byte Of Torah, A (and) A MegaByte Of Torah A Byte Of Torah is a weekly newsletter on the Torah (Five Books of Moses) portion of the week. It is divided up into two parts. The first section analyzes a verse from the weekly portion. The second part focuses in on a particular verse from the week's portion and tries to make it applicable to the modern person. A MegaByte Of Torah is a monthly newsletter that explores, in-depth, various Jewish topics usually related to the current Jewish month. Providing there are no problems, the current issue of A Byte Of Torah will arrive before Shabbos (the Jewish Sabbath), usually Wednesday evening or Thursday morning, and the current issue of A MegaByte Of Torah will arrive within the first half of the Jewish Lunar Month.

1216 Code of Federal Regulations on the Internet The complete, updated Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) on the global Internet. Counterpoint's CFR files are derived from the official typesetting tapes created by the United States Government Printing Office. Counterpoint's software processes the GPO tapes to produce ASCII files. These files contain all the text, tables and charts from the original GPO files. The Counterpoint files are then WAIS indexed to enable full text searching. Users may access a title by Part, Section, chapter, subchapter, and subpart. In addition to full-text searching, the Internet CFR enables users to search and retrieve specific part numbers. Subscribers may purchase the compete set, individual titles, or any combination of titles. Counterpoint updates the CFR by incorporating CFR changes as published in the daily Federal Register.

1265 Disease Prevention News (DPN) The Texas Department of Health has published Disease Prevention News (DPN) for over fifty years. Distributed twice a month, the DPN newsletter provides health care professionals throughout the state of Texas with a wide variety of timely public health information, including Texas morbidity and mortality data. The electronic version of DPN is created as a .pdf file, which allows access to DPN through Windows, UNIX, DOS, and MacIntosh viewers, while still retaining the basic format of the print publication. Because this file format contains hypertext links, it is viewable only with the Adobe Acrobat Reader.

Entrepreneur Weekly See eWeekly.

1294 Entrepreneurs Newsletter The Internet Entrepreneurs Support Service (IESS) is an international association of entrepreneurs helping entrepreneurs obtain information on how to do business on the Internet in a profitable and ethical manner. In addition, the IESS serves as a "virtual electronic communications support group" to connect entrepreneurs who would like help with those who would like to offer help in doing business on the Internet. The IESS offers many free services and operates as a NFP (not-for-profit) organization to promote entrepreneurial communication. We encourage corporate sponsorship and are looking for authors to write articles that would be of interest to entrepreneurs.

1308 FactSheet Five - Electric F5-E is the electonic version of F5, the compendium of zines, newsletters, independently produced magazines, chapbooks and other artifacts of the very small press. Most of the publications reviewed have circulations of under 500. We provide ordering information, the size and quality of the publication, and our opinion on the contents. F5 and F5-E are published four times a year (more or less), and each issue reviews 1,200-1,600 other publications. In addition to files extracted from the print version, F5-E contains reviews from other publications and individuals, articles about zines, links to over 1,000 ezines, online mail-order catalogs and the FAQs for the alt.zines, alt.ezines and alt.binaries.zines newsgroups.

1456 Mac*Chat A free, weekly electronic newsletter biased toward Macintosh computer users who are production-oriented professionals. Other Mac users may find many, many items of interest as well. Mac*Chat contains no paid ads and accepts no kickbacks from the industry, so all opinions contained within may be trusted. A typical issue may contain essays by the editor (which serve as a method of getting a discussion started), shopping advice and instructions for an excellent way to accomplish a task on the Mac, plus tips and advice from readers and a few questions to be answered in the next issue. Mac*Chat is unique among computer newsletters in its tone—unfailingly friendly and enthusiastic—just like the Mac!

1464 Mathematica World A monthly electronic Mathematica notebook publication. Mathematica World aims to encourage users to develop their skill and expand their use of Mathematica. Tutorials interactively guide users through aspects of the front-end, kernel, and package functionality. Various notebooks illustrate the use of Mathematica in a broad range of instructive situations. Announcements of new packages and included packages help the user extend Mathematica in specific areas. A news section includes solutions to problems that have been posed over Internet news and mail groups. An album of animations showcases user applications from around the world. Referred articles present significant new and novel applications of Mathematica. Subscribers also receive free Personal Interactive Support, an interpreted on-line Mathematica support program.

1483 Navy News Service (NAVNEWS) The Navy News Service (NAVNEWS) is the official news service of the Department of the Navy of the United States of America. NAVNEWS contains official news and information about fleet operations and exercises, personnel policies, budget actions, and more. This is the same news service distributed through Navy circuits to ships at sea and to shore commands around the world. The desktop edition is fully produced and ready for downloading and printing. This edition is intended to be downloaded and printed intact, thus providing smaller commands with a ready-made Navy News Service in an attractive, readable format. The NAVNEWS desktop edition is compressed to reduce the file size. To use the NAVNEWS desktop edition, you need PKUNZIP version 2.0 (or equivalent) and either PageMaker 5.0 or Adobe Acrobat Reader. The desktop edition is published weekly, typically on Thursday afternoons.

1551 Postmodern Jewish Philosophy Network Postmodern Judaism, philosophically considered, dedicated both to a philosophic review of the variety of postmodern Jewish discourses and to postmodern reflections on the variety of Jewish philosophies and Jewish philosophic theologies. What postmodern means here is a question to be answered only in the doing. The journal is in between a Listserv network and a standard newsletter-journal. Members send in materials electronically to the editor, who, in consultation with an editorial board, edits them into a journal format four times a year and sends them to the distribution list. Contributing editors oversee sections on the following topics (each one is covered once or twice annually): Philosophy; Talmud and Postmodern Jewish Philosophy (PMJP); Kabbalah and PMJP; Bible and PMJP; Postcritical Christian Philosophy and Judaism; Pedagogy; Ritual and Public Jewish life; Book Reviews.

1556 Principia Cybernetica Newsletter Newsletter for the participants and people interested in keeping informed about the Principia Cybernetica Project (PCP). PCP is a computer-supported collaborative attempt to develop an integrated evolutionary-systemic philosophy or world view. Its contributors are distributed over several continents, and they keep contact mainly by electronic mail, annual meetings, the newsletter, and the World Wide Web. PCP focuses on the clear formulation of basic concepts and principles of the cybernetic approach. The PCP philosophy starts from the self-organization of multi-level systems through blind variation and natural selection. This leads to a process metaphysics, a constructive-selectionist epistemology, and an evolutionary ethics.

1559 Project Gutenberg Newsletter Project Gutenberg encourages creation and distribution of English language electronic texts. Its goal is to provide a collection of 10,000 of the most used books by the year 2001 and to reduce the effective costs to the user to approximately one cent per book, plus the costs of media and of shipping and handling. It calls on all interested parties to get involved with the creation and distribution of electronic-text whether through a commitment to typing, scanning, proofreading, collecting, or any other appropriate activity. The project requests participants to send any e-texts they might find.

1561 Public Domain Report and Electronic Digest Monthly guide to public domain music, film, art, literature, theater and children's works. In the music industry bible This Business of Music author and PDR Advisory Board member M. William Krasilovsky notes: "The public domain is like a vast national park . . . without a guide for the lost traveler . . . or clearly defined roads." Public Domain Report is the essential guide to this priceless resource. An invaluable research tool, PDR is the only continuous source of useful and reliable information about specially selected works as they enter the public domain.

1628 TEX Publication Distribution List Redistribution list for TEX-related electronic form periodicals being made available in addition to INFO-TEX for your convenience. The distribution of TEX-Pubs includes TEXhax Digest, UKTEX Digest, the TEX Users Group's TEX and TUG News, and the Frequently Asked Questions and Supplementary TEX Information posts from the comp.text.tex newsgroup. The intent is to allow users a single site for delivery of these electronic periodicals. This list is offered in lieu of directly posting these documents to INFO-TEX. The decision to create a support list is in an effort to provide this information to interested readers, but not replicate it for those who wish to retain their current subscription(s) and not be bothered by extraneous material.

1635 Titnet The electronic mail network of The International Tit Society (TITS), currently having about 200 members worldwide. Titnet posts three formal series: Titnet, the listing of email subscribers and their interests; Titnews, the forum for exchange on academic activities; and Titnotes, the forum for information about tits and other hole-nesting birds. All three sections are numbered serially and include posting date. Because the network is expected to grow only moderately, it is not handled by a listserver and does not expect to create archives accessible by anonymous ftp. However, these and other options will continue to be reviewed as Titnet continues to develop.

1638 Trade News Originally a daily bulletin covering news pertaining to the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), and other trade issues, the Trade News mailing list now provides two separate bulletins: Trade Week and NAFTA & Inter-American Trade Monitor. Trade Week is a general summary of the latest events in international trade, including GATT and regional trade agreements. Also provided in each edition is a resource list of articles, books, videos, and upcoming conferences. NAFTA & Inter-American Trade Monitor was launched following the January 1, 1994 implementation of NAFTA. The bulletin covers NAFTA's impact on the environment, farmers, jobs, migration and democracy.

1651 UK Nonlinear News The primary goal of UK Nonlinear News is to allow researchers in the applied and theoretical sides of nonlinear mathematics to keep abreast of the wide variety of nonlinear activities throughout the UK. Broadly speaking, we hope that each issue will carry several articles about various groups and activities, as well as shorter pieces of news, reviews, and questions. Although primarily intended as a service to the UK community, this should not be seen as exclusive, and participation from overseas is welcomed.

Section 7: Computer Science; Social, Cultural and Political Aspects of Computers; Academic Computing Support

Directory of Scholarly and Professional E-Conferences
10th Revision

1. Fair Use Guidelines

Single copies of this directory from its networked sources, or of specific entries from their networked sources, may be made for internal purposes, personal use, or study by an individual, an individual library, or an educational or research institution. The Association of Research Libraries has sole right to produce a print edition. The directory or its contents may not be otherwise reproduced or republished in excerpt or entirety, in print or electronic form, without permission from Diane K. Kovacs, diane@kovacs.com.

2. Scope of the Directory

This directory contains descriptions of electronic conferences (e-conferences) on topics of interest to scholars and professionals for use in their scholarly, pedagogical and professional activities. E-conference is the umbrella term that includes discussion lists, Internet interest groups, Usenet newsgroups, forums, etc. Since the 9th revision we have begun including text-based virtual reality systems known as MUDs, MOOs, Mucks, Mushes, etc. that are primarily for scholarly, pedagogical or professional activities.

The e-conferences in this Directory are all accessible via Internet services including email, Usenet News Readers, telnet, gopher, or www. We have used our own judgment in deciding what is of scholarly, pedagogical or professional interest, but always consider any advice or argument about our decisions. We have placed the entries into categories by deciding the "dominant" academic subject area of the electronic conference.

Where possible, the information in each record has been checked for currency and accuracy by contacting the moderators or other contact person. We chose the term "moderator" as the umbrella term to describe the contact person, coordinator, listowner, editor, moderator, etc.; in other words the Human in Charge. Topic descriptions are taken in whole or part from the descriptions provided by each moderator.

Format of the fields in the lists section:

|---|---|
| Discussion Name: | The name of the group; the listname |
| Topic: | Short description of the group; usually in the listowner's words |
| Subscription Address: | Send subscription and signoff messages to this address |
| Moderated: | Are messages screened, by editing or monitoring; is the list private? |
| Archives: | Are there archives? Where? |
| Contact Address: | The moderator; who to contact if you have questions |
| Submission Address: | Send contributions to the group's discussion to this address |

4. Acknowledgments

Thank you to Marty Hoag, Listowner of New-List, for providing the archives of New-List as a clearing house for much of the email based discussion list information. Special thank you to David Hartland. NISP/Mailbase Project, Computing Service, The University, Newcastle upon Tyne for information on 235 of the United Kingdom MAILBASE e-conferences. Thank you also to Teri Harrison for updating and providing information on the COMSERVE conferences, Pedro Saizar for providing information on Latin American Studies electronic conferences, Joseph Van Zwaren for Israeli electronic conference information, Joan Korenman for information on Women's Studies conferences, and Jean Schneider for confirming European e-conferences. Thank you very sincerely to all the individuals who contributed conference names, information and feedback about conference statuses. Any errors are the responsibility of the compilers of each section. If you can provide corrections or additional information about any of these electronic conferences, please contact the Directory Team member responsible for that area or Diane K. Kovacs - Editor-in-Chief - diane@kovacs.com.

6. Generic Subscription Instructions:

LISTSERV, COMSERVE, LISTPROC, MAILBASE, MAILSERV

To subscribe to a LISTSERV (both Unix and IBM/VM LSOFT LISTSERV software is in use), COMSERVE, LISTPROC, MAILBASE, or MAILSERV email distributed e-conference send an email message addressed to the email address provided in the "Subscription Address" field. Leave the subject line blank. The text of the message must read:

SUBSCRIBE LISTNAME Yourfirstname Yourlastname Your Institution

(LISTNAME means the name of the list, e.g. if the List Name field says LIBREF-L, the LISTNAME is LIBREF-L)

Do not include any other text and leave the subject line blank, as this is being read by a computer program and not a person. . .the program just won't understand and will bounce back your command if it is not worded as specified above.

-REQUEST Addresses

To subscribe to e-conferences with a -REQUEST address, send an email message to list-REQUEST@host (e.g., SOC-CULTURE-GREEK-REQUEST@CS.WISC.EDU). Use the same basic directions as with the Listserv software. The -REQUEST address gets you to the Coordinator, rather than to the membership of the entire e-conference. Please look carefully at the entry for each list you are interested in, to see if a -REQUEST address has been provided. Include your name, address, and institutional affiliation in your message.

USENET NEWSGROUPS

Usenet Newsgroups are generally accessed by typing "RN" or "NN" at the shell prompt, ready screen or $ prompt on your email account. Check with your Computer Services people to find out what the local availability and procedures are for access to Usenet Newsgroups.

MAJORDOMO

Send email to the `majordomo@site` address. The text of the message should be: `subscribe listname youremailaddress`.

Subscription directions for other types of discussions are included with individual entries.

See also a fine publication titled "Discussion Lists: Mail List Manager Commands", by James Milles, St. Louis University Law Library; `millesjg@sluvca.slu.edu`

7. Archives Access

Archives are available for many discussions. On LISTSERV, COMSERVE, MAILSERV and MAILBASE to receive a list of files available from a server send the command:

`INDEX LISTNAME` to `SERVER@NODEID`

You can then send the message: `GET Filename Filetype` to the `SERVER@NODEID`. (`SERVER` means LISTSERV or COMSERVE or MAILBASE or MAILSERV or whatever, `NODEID` means the site of the server which runs the e-conference.)

It is also possible to search Bitnet LISTSERV and COMSERVE discussion archives for items of particular interest to you. For details on archives searching:

For LISTSERV send the message

`INFO DATABASE`
to a LISTSERV of your choice. (e.g. `LISTSERV@PSUVM`)

For COMSERVE send the message

to `Comserve@cios.llc.rpi.edu`.

Some discussions maintain archives available via anonymous FTP. This is noted where available. Some archives are maintained on other types of Internet server, e.g. GOPHER and WWW. Use the URL provided to connect to those archive sites.

When in doubt use the Contact Address.

20 FACSUP-L Supports faculty efforts to use computer technology in their work. In higher education we are witnessing an astounding phenomenon, as computing technology changes not only the tools available for our work but our very conceptions of teaching and learning. What follows from this is that a large proportion of the faculty is training itself to use computers in teaching, research and service. Thus, the faculty support system must be institutionalized across both the academic and the technical sides of the school. That's one part of what this list is about: mutual support among people charged with support of faculty in this computing-skills self-training process (people in jobs similar to mine). I expect, therefore, that a significant amount of the discussion will concern issues of support center objectives, policies, operation and the like. This would include broad strategy concerns within the university/college for gaining resources and administrative support. I hope list subscribers will include both support center staffs and faculty working together to advance the systemic support of this enormous project in higher education.

87 ACTNOW-L Promotes unfettered discussion of the ideologies and practices (many of them detrimental to both students and faculty members) extant within academe. Many specialized programs in the humanities and social sciences have become controlled by demagogues who enforce a new type of sectarian totalitarianism. They work toward the suppression of academic freedom and use their tenure to force their ideologies upon others, to enrich themselves, and to perpetuate their power. The time has come for them to accept the responsibility for the present mediocre level of education for which students pay exorbitant tuition. This can only come about if those who have suffered from this type of abuse have the courage and means to speak out about inequity and corruption. Many students and faculty members have genuine grievances; nevertheless, many administrators deny them due process under fraudulent judicial systems. These systems give the appearance that they support fair practices; however, many have become the weapons of corrupt provosts and their pandering ombudspersons. These officials suppress evidence in attempts to cover up their own malfeasance and use their power to intimidate their adversaries. To this end they forge documents and deliberately destroy careers through capricious blackballing and stonewalling. To further compound the cover-up, many listserv list managers indulge in covert censorship of Internet information. They manipulate the flow of information in support of the demagogues and receive rewards of honors, degrees, promotion, and tenure. Many others feign the moderation of lists and then censor them to conform to their own idea of political correctness (totalitarianism). Actnow-L provides a forum in which the underdogs may express themselves without fear of reprisal. They need a means to expose the injustices meted out to them by privileged academic demagogues who increasingly usurp absolute power. The manifesto shows subscribers how they may use the actnow-L list. It gives them a platform on which they may assuage the lack of ethics and the injustice rampant in academe. They may also use this forum to warn others of the fraudulent programs that many institutions cannot provide yet constantly publish in their catalogs.

109 DU MOO Diversity University is designed as a virtual campus. The external structure of the campus is finite, thus allowing this map to remain relatively constant, while the interior of each building is essentially infinite, allowing an indefinite number of rooms to be constructed by users. The mission of Diversity University is to provide a dynamic virtual learning environment that is accessible to everyone with telnet capability. This environment includes many educational models from traditional to constructivist and allows for both personalization and specialization of an individual teacher's facilities while still offering the technical and organizational expertise of the volunteer staff. We at DU think of it as an experiential learning project; educators refer to it as constructivism.

141 ASC-L The Academic Sexual Correctness list is an outgrowth of CASE (Consenting Academics for Sexual Equity). CASE was founded in early 1994 by both professors and students to combat a concerted "feminist" campaign against students and professors who had become involved in an intimate (romantic) relationship. CASE involvement dealt with only one small area of the current emphasis on sexual correctness in academia. Consequently, the need for a network that focused on all aspects of academic sexual correctness became apparent; the ASC-L is a response to that need. ASC-L will encompass all aspects of campus sexual control issues - irrespective of their ideological origins. We are concerned with sexual harassment issues; sexual consent issues; attempts to regulate sexual content of speech on campus; attempts to regulate sexual content of course materials; attempts to regulate material of any sort that is held to be sexually offensive; and sexual discrimination issues, irrespective of the subjects of the discrimination. It is our goal that the existence of ASC-L will ultimately help foster a campus climate which would be incompatible with the intrusion of institutional authority to regulate sexual matters simply because they are sexual or because they are held to give sexual offense. The principles of consent, privacy and academic freedom are the core principles which have motivated the founding of ASC-L.

187 BILINGUE-L For elementary teachers of Spanish/English. It is a forum for questions and discussion of any issues relating to serving the needs of Spanish-speaking students becoming literate in Spanish as well as in English; English-speaking students developing high levels of proficiency in Spanish while making normal progress in English development; both language groups performing academically at their grade level, developing positive attitudes toward the two languages being learned and toward the communities they represent, and developing a positive self-image. It is assumed that a second language is best learned not as the object of instruction, but rather as the medium of instruction, through a content-based curriculum. Discussion may focus on areas of instruction, methods, evaluation, materials, and resources.

189 BR_Cafe A place for kids to discuss what they're reading. BR_Cafe welcomes messages of two kinds: those requesting an individual with whom to discuss a book or discussion of the book itself for the general forum discussion. In order to participate in discussions, or simply to post a request for a bookreading e-pal, you must subscribe to the BR_Cafe list. When you provide your subscription request, it is sent to the list moderator who checks your e-mail address against those who have submitted reviews to the BR_Review list. If found, you will be manually added to the list of BR_Cafe subscribers. If not found, you will be asked to provide a book review for the BR_Review list. In other words, you provide a book review as your "ticket" into the book conversations in BR_Cafe.

230 KIDLINK For global youth between the ages of 10 and 15 years. In a series of yearly projects beginning with KIDS-91, over 23,000 children from over 62 countries have participated in the dialog (through KIDS-94). The KIDLINK list itself is for distributing official information about the project; the actual dialog takes place on several other lists run by the KIDLINK Society. There are also several lists for teachers and other adult coordinators of KIDLINK activities. Any language is acceptable on KIDLINK lists, but there are special lists to promote communication among both students and teachers in Spanish, Portuguese, Japanese, and the Nordic languages. The headquarters of the KIDLINK Society are in Saltrod, Arendal, Norway.

234 MATHMAGIC-K-3-OPEN - MATHMAGIC-4-6-OPEN - MATHMAGIC-7-9-OPEN - MATHMAGIC-10-12-OPEN - MATHMAGIC-GENERAL-OPEN MathMagic is a K-12 telecommunications project developed in El Paso, TX that provides a strong motivator for students to use computer technology while increasing problem-solving strategies and communications skills. In a nutshell, MathMagic posts challenges into each of four categories (k-3, 4-6, 7-9 and 10-12) to trigger each registered team to pair up with another team and engage in an exchange of problem-solving dialog. When an agreement is reached, one solution is posted for every pair. This project is for schools who are presently using or shortly plan to use computers with modems. Direct Internet access is desirable (see NET-PROVIDERS file,) but in some areas, a local Bulletin Board System (BBS) or Net user may have to act as a go-between. Please ask about special arrangements. OPEN lists are available to everyone and are read-only. You must register in order to participate in the discussions.

239 PAIDEIA The National Paideia Center promotes the efforts of educators who are implementing the long-term reform of public education known as the Paideia Program ("paideia" is from the Greek paidos: the upbringing of a child). In 1982, a group of scholars and educators, headed by Mortimer Adler, published The Paideia Proposal, which stated that a truly democratic society has a responsibility both to provide a high quality education and to provide this education to all of its members. They concluded that our current public schools are accomplishing neither goal consistently and proposed a framework called the Paideia Program, outlined in this book and two subsequent ones.

Art, Architecture and Urban Design

435 12HR-ISBN-JPEG Around-the-clock posting of sequenced hypermodern photo-art by Brad Brace. Classic hypermodern photos posted/mailed every 12 hours. Perfect trans-avant-garde art for the 90's! An extension of the printed ISBN-Book series. Critically acclaimed. Imagery is gradually acquired, selected and sequenced over time. NOTE: This list will NOT be used to distribute the photographs. Those are available via ftp,the web, usenet (alt.binaries.pictures.12hr), and other techniques as explained in the supplemental material.

439 ALT-PHOTO-PROCESS Discussion of alternative photographic processes which traditionally have been those that do not use the main stream silver gelatin process, i.e. the printing paper that you buy at the photo shop. Gum bichromate, platinum, carbon dye transfer, cyanotype, photogravure, kallitype, vandyke brown and color xerox are some processes that are currently thought of as alternative processes. The group should be free to talk on any unconventional photographic process or modification to the standard silver gelatin process. Photographers that embark on alternative processes usually have a "do it yourself" attitude. This discussion group caters to that interest.

444 ARTNET Art that is concerned with: network installation project communication temporary ad-hoc transient mobile time-based formless de-centred. I call this PERIPATETIC art. I define peripatetic art thus: the art or action of creative endeavour with lack of fixed base. There is no fixed centre that claims to have 'the knowledge.' All projects involve some aspect of lack of enclosure the promotion of action without centre. Peripatetic art tends towards the transient, the time based, the mobile. Peripatetology is as much about receiving the action, the project, as it is about initiating it.

477 PHOTO-3D 3D photography and closely allied subjects. In this list, 3D is defined as the presentation of separate and different single images for the left and right eyes. This definition is not intended to exclude lenticular presentations or the Pulfrich effect or any other traditional technique. It is intended to exclude discussions of, for instance, perspective drawings and ray tracings (often called 3D by people in other fields) and is also intended to limit the discussion of holography to headlines only, inasmuch as holography is a radically different technique (and after all should by rights have its own newsgroup or mailing list). Unfortunately, this is not the place to post 3D computer images.

509 GEMCS-L Early modern culture, both western and eastern. (The boundaries of the "early modern" are problematic–they might be, in fact, a fruitful topic of discussion. For now, though, we're defining them as the period between 1492 and 1850.) We invite people working in a wide range of disciplines to join us in discussing the way such issues as race, class, gender, the body, sexuality, science, nationalism, and imperialism are being reshaped by recent work in critical and cultural theory. In defining the Early Modern period broadly to include the Renaissance, Enlightenment, and early 19th century of Western civilization, we hope to foster an exchange of ideas across traditional boundaries of historical specialization. We'd also like to foster exchanges across cultural boundaries by perhaps stretching our notions of "period"–but we're not exactly sure how to do that yet. Let's talk.

543 HISTOWNR For all those who maintain lists dedicated to the discussion of history and related topics. HISTOWNR is an instrument to exchange information between all those lists, and shall also help those who have only just started their own e-conference and need a helping hand to maintain and control their e-conference. HISTOWNR is meant for e-conference owners only, but people who have, let's say, a call for papers to distribute, may send their mail to this e-conference to have it passed on to all lists connected. HISTOWNR is the first step towards the planned History Network, a loose cooperation between all lists discussing history. To establish the History Network, we need volunteers who would like to set up a new e-conference and/or ftp-sites. Sponsored by Historisches Seminar, Universitat Oldenburg, Postfach 2503, D-W-2900 Oldenburg.

753 INDYJOEL Distribution of the Indiana Joel series of stories; aimed at all parties interested in humorous stories. This list is solely for the propagation of these stories and no other stories are distributed. Indiana Joel is a character created by Captain Bibble; Indy is a technical wizard who's always getting up to something, and generally blames the entire world. Surreal and highly improbable things seem to happen to Indy on a regular basis, and he's bound to be found in the middle of quite an adventure (and he doesn't always realise what he's doing, either). The group IJtalk is for discussion of the stories.

756 IOUDAIOS-L IOUDAIOS (Greek for "Jew")-L is devoted to the exploration of first-century Judaism; its special interest is in the writings of Philo of Alexandria and Flavius Josephus. The Philonic and Josephan corpora are extensive enough that they invite all sorts of analysis - from literary, historical, and philosophical perspectives, to name a few. There is also considerable interest among participants in the social realities that lie behind these texts, including the origins of Christianity. Historically, discussion ranges from the Maccabean period to the time of the Mishnah. While all new members are warmly welcomed, the discussion assumes a significant background in first-century Judaism and also the ability to read Greek.

780 PHIL-LIT Literature and philosophy: news, job and book announcements, calls for papers, and conference plans. Subscribers post queries, trade inside information and advice, preview drafts of articles and reviews, dispute, praise, congratulate, insult, refute, and defend one another. At present there is no means of linking the various practitioners and unifying the various activities in the field of literature and philosophy. PHIL-LIT is being created to fill that void. It is intended as a single source of information which is also an exchange of ideas - an electronic newsletter run on democratic principles, so to speak. It owes allegiance to no particular school or style of criticism, and is open to anyone who takes a serious interest in philosophical interpretations of literature, literary investigations of classic works of philosophy, philosophy of language, and literary theory.

Music

803 78-L Music and recordings of the pre-LP era. The group is open to collectors and lovers of all kinds of music of this era, such as early jazz and blues, big bands, show music, vaudeville, classical, etc., as well as spoken word and other historical recordings. We also welcome discussion of recording history, discography, the collector's market, and vintage phonographs. The common element is the fact that what we listen to was recorded at (or near) 78 rpm.

804 ACID-JAZZ Acid Jazz: a relatively new form of dance music popular in European clubs and at parties and clubs around the world. Although the term itself, acid jazz, is confining and somewhat arbitrary, it is useful in its shortness and recognizablity. However, this list talks about everything from 70s dancefloor jazz and funk to rap with jazz flavor to soul to etc. Terms like jazzflow, blue funk, new groove, schmoove grooves and even "post-digital-dance-fusion" are used to describe the type of music this list discusses. This is a manually operated mailing list, not a reflector.

826 DREAMPOP-L Music that is commonly referred to as "shegazing" in the U.K. (for lack of a better term) or "dream-pop" by U.S. music critics. Since these are ambiguous ways of describing the sound, a few points of reference are needed. Groups like The Boo Radleys, Slowdive, Chapterhouse, Lilys, Pale Saints, Swirlies, Lush, Catherine Wheel, Ride and My Bloody Valentine don't necessarily sound the same but are generally placed in a similar musical category. The topic is not limited to these bands and open-minded ideas and insightful opinions are highly encouraged.

911 DESCARTES-L Rene Descartes list was created to enable and encourage competent and sustained discussion of issues concerning the understanding of the thought of Rene Descartes and its influence. The list is open to anyone, from any discipline, with a serious interest in this area of study. We have a particular interest in encouraging close critical discussions and "slow readings" of the Cartesian texts and of secondary sources (commentaries, biographies, etc.) pertaining to these works. However, this list is also directed to promoting the active exchange of ideas, information, and scholarly inquiries regarding Cartesian philosophy in the broadest sense, including its influences and significance.

971 PEIRCE-L All topics pertaining to the philosophy of the American philosopher/logician/scientist Charles Peirce. Since Peirce is especially associated not only with topics in logic and the philosophy of science, but also with theory of representation and interpretation ("semiotic"), and with the conception of thought as communicational and social, the list membership is multidisciplinary and includes an unusually wide range of philosophical interests. But focus is consistently on the philosophical basis of his thought, and the standing aim is to sustain on-line discussion which is philosophical in content and attitude. Apart from that, there is no special agenda. Observers as well as active participants are welcome. All discussion is recorded and retrievable, and the facilities of associated gopher and WWW servers are available, with on-line digital library of primary and secondary materials and other intellectual resources in development by the Peirce Telecommunity Project, with which the list is associated.

1075 OBJ-REL Objective discussion of religion. Once one leaves the college dorm, those late night discussions about religion and the nature of the universe are rather difficult to come by. Many people settle on a set of beliefs and do not wish have any further discussions, but some of us hunger for more information and discussion. OBJ-REL is intended to fill this need. Discussion on OBJ-REL is intended to be centered around such topics as: existence of God or gods, creationism versus evolution, reasons for the existence of religions, epistemology, religion and government, etc. This discussion is not intended to be a forum for emotional appeals to convert others, but discussions about the content of your beliefs and the reasons for those beliefs are encouraged.

1120 MOVIES-SEIVOM The Self-Referential Movies list recommends and discusses movies that "break the 4th wall" and display a more-overt-than-usual awareness of themselves as movies. Movies about Hollywood, movies where someone appears "as himself," movies-within-movies, movies that play with genre conventions or comment on the phenomenon of stardom, are all fertile territory. We're particularly interested in older movies, cartoons, silent films, foreign films, shorts and documentaries, and how this kind of recursion showed up in anecdotes, still photographs, fan magazines, etc. We hope for thoughtful brief essays rather than scattershot references.

1165 PTc To develop a textbase for teachers and theorists of rhetoric. PTc is conceived as a note-taking collective which has a dialogical format. In many respects, PTc is a way of sharing "notes" interactively on issues related to rhetoric and cultural studies. It should be regarded as a hypertextually oriented database in which collaborators agree to deposit their notes for the benefit of all. PTc is composed of 8 sublists, 3 of which are part of the Cycles Project. Each of these projects requires special formats and protocols. The lists: PRETEXT (announcements); PTC (administrative sublist); (3) REINVW (a cycle: reviews of works and interviews with authors), RHETGLOS (a cycle: rhetorical terminology), HISTRHET (a cycle: history of rhetoric and rhetorical studies); PTISSUES (a source for new cycles: open forum for serious discussions of issues); RHETCHAT (casual conversations) and BURP (humor, flames, and for use of indecorous language). Since PTc is mutivalent and serves different interests, subscribers to PRETEXT will receive a lengthy, six-part introductory message.

1199 CENTRAL-ASIA-STUDIES-L Central Asia Studies. This forum was established by the Research Schools of Social Sciences and Pacific & Asian Studies, The Australian National University, Canberra to provide a world-wide communications vehicle and a central electronic archive for anyone working on, or interested in the study of, the broadly defined Central Asia's history, politics, sociology, demography, economics, languages, culture, philosophy and religion, and to place these within the broader framework of the changing global order. The forum, therefore, both complements and extends the scope of research interests of the only other related email system, the CENASIA (Former Soviet Republic - Central Asia Political Discussion List), which runs on listserv@vm1.mcgill.ca and is moderated by Keith Martin (czgk@musica.mcgill.ca).

1202 DIVERS-L Diversity. Persons of all backgrounds, including African American, Asian Pacific American, Hispanic/Latino American, Alaskan Native/American Indian, Caucasian American, foreign (nonimmigrant), and including gender, are invited to participate. In terms of particular academic needs, discussion should have representative ethnic inputs into various academic programs. While the e-conference founders are in the architectural area, they intend general discussion. Specific uses could be in terms of studio design problems, lecturers, exhibits, etc. They hope that discussion would enrich studies in this way rather than focusing on any particular group. They believe that every culture in America has something of value to contribute to the whole of American culture.

1417 McLuhan-list Advertising. McLuhan-list is operated by Project McLuhan, a joint venture between two non-profit groups based in Toronto, Canada, the Marshall McLuhan Center For Global Communications and the McLuhan Center For Media Sciences. It has been in the works for some time. The Project's mission is to "revitalize and update the work of the late media guru, using McLuhan process analysis to investigate trends, patterns, and projections within our socio-cultural matrix." Special emphasis is on all forms of marketing, advertising, and communication theory. The Project's intent is to release to the public work they have been doing since the 1980s – all material that is not presently considered "confidential" to the originating client will be released. This includes some fascinating stuff – such as the relationship between serial murders and unregulated technology, and the future of the Internet itself. Lots of stuff on what makes advertising work, or not work.

1418 NewsCom Synergies in print news media. To make available synergies discerned in, and created from, print news media (up to a 12-year time span). Many "facts," particularly scientific ones, have a habit of changing with time. NewsCommando shows extreme prejudice toward those articles whose contents exhibit "legs." The depth of insight possible using the information mosaic method can be staggering. A form of electronic magazine, NewsCommando can serve as a reference tool, offer unique jump-off points for Medline, PaperChase, or other searches, and, in many ways, is the "poor-man's IdeaFisher/IdeaBank." Vol. 1 will contain the following articles: ChemTao, Synergies In the Life Sciences, EarthWatch1, Defining the Scope of Environmental Destruction, Why Euthanasia Must Never Be Legalized.

1580 VIACON-L Viable constitutionalism. The most idealistic design for democratic government can easily come to naught when it produces a fragile structure that can be nullified by a military coup, an autocratic plebiscitary president or militant single-party authoritarianism. Most of the analysis of constitutional systems, whether based on a single country such as the United States or on parliamentary regimes - such as those of all the industrialized democracies except the U.S. - pays scant attention to the problem of viability because it presupposes that any constitutional regime can survive. The issues to be studied are, accordingly, how such regimes work and the comparative merits and demerits of various constitutional designs and substructures. How the parts fit together and whether or not they support a viable regime has scarcely attracted any attention. In the world today, however, the majority of members of the United Nations have fragile constitutional regimes that are often disrupted and replaced by autocratic or authoritarian dictatorships.

Since authoritarianism, whether under single-party rule or military domination, is also fragile and liable to disruption, many of the new states now face an unprecedented opportunity to re-establish democratic government. However, unless these re-constituted democracies are viable, they face a vicious cycle, because, unless their newly constituted regimes can cope with severe crises, they are likely to collapse again. All those interested on these issues are welcome to join.

1586 DRIVE-INS Drive-in movie theatres and classic indoor bijous across the U.S. and even around the world. We'll focus on those that are still in operation but would love to hear tales, too, of gone-but-not-forgotten ones. We will also discuss drive-in movies from the golden era of drive-ins, which I define as roughly 1950-1970. If a movie contains a giant insect or lizard, juvenile delinquents, rock'n'roll music, flying saucers, then it is worthy of discussion on this list.

1599 ADDICTION-MEDICINE For health care professionals working in the field of addiction to alcohol and/or other psychoactive substances. A broad working definition of addiction follows: "Addiction is a disease characterized by continuous or periodic impaired control over the use of drugs or alcohol, preoccupation with drugs or alcohol, continued use of these chemicals despite adverse consequences related to their use, and distortions in thinking, most notably denial" (adapted from the American Society of Addiction Medicine). We recognize that there is a spectrum of use of alcohol and some psychoactive drugs, from intermittent use that does not interfere with health, to malignant destructive use. For the purposes of this list, we would in general encourage open discussion about all aspects of addiction as defined above. Please note that this list is intended for those working in the field and is not to be used as a recovery list to work on individual issues.

1706 RORSCHACH For psychologists and other allied professionals interested in the Rorschach Technique. We welcome anyone interested in the Rorschach and we have beginners as well as experienced researchers and clinicians on the list. Most of us are strong proponents and while discussion of validity issues is certainly in order, this is not an appropriate forum to argue over the Rorschach's value. Conference announcements and reposts of pertinent material from other lists are welcome. Brief discussions of other projective techniques are also invited, although the primary interest here is the Rorschach. Posts of complete protocols or score summaries as well as interpretations are also welcome. This is not intended as a list for laypersons and appropriate technical language is fine. Subscribers are assumed to be psychologists, psychiatrists, graduate students, or allied professionals.

1749 CHILDRI- Rights of the child. The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child was adopted in 1989 and has been ratified by more than 150 countries. The discussion on this list aims at the interpretation of the Convention and its implementation in the different fields covered by the Convention. Although the drafting of the Convention lasted ten years, little has been written about the underlying juridical, pedagogical, social, cultural and philosophical concepts. If one wants to work for the benefit of children, the Convention should not and cannot be just a piece of paper. All involved in working with and for children, teachers, jurists, librarians, pedagogues, social workers and many others, are confronted with the rights of the child in their daily work. The results of this confrontation should be matched with results from research and actual child policy. This discussion list opens a forum to raise and discuss fundamental questions. It can also act as a quick way of asking references about a special topic. And it certainly is suitable for announcing new actions and ideas to ameliorate the conditions of life for children.

1826 PPN The Progressive Population Network is for the development of alternative ways to think about population processes beyond the standard demographic, microeconomic and neo-malthusian perspectives, and beyond the notion that population control is a panacea for the world's problems. The list is intended to start a conversation about the strengths and weaknesses of current approaches, and about ways to incorporate and further develop the contributions of sociological, anthropological, Marxist, neo-Marxist, environmentalist and feminist theory and research to the study of population. Central to our discussions will be the importance of class, gender and racial/ethnic divisions and, more generally, the role of power in shaping demographic behavior, policies and processes. We believe that rapid population growth poses important problems to communities, nation-states and the globe, but we also believe that population stabilization cannot be achieved without addressing the social conditions that lead to excessive growth.

1859 MATFEM Materialist feminism. Representing a powerful theoretical/activist perspective which brings together feminists from all disciplines, united in their desire to build a feminist project for the twenty-first century. This is why we created MATFEM, so we can establish personal and professional networks and, in the process, engage in the collective production of materialist feminist knowledge, frameworks, and politics. Materialist feminist work is distinguished by the claim that the critical perspective of historical materialism is historically necessary and empowering for feminism's oppositional political project. Materialist feminism calls for a consideration of the ways class, divisions of labor, state power, as well as gendered, racial, national and sexual subjectivities, bodies, and knowledges are all crucial to local and global social production. This systemic view - the argument that the materiality of the social consists of class, divisions of labor, state power, and ideology - is one of the distinguishing features of materialist feminist analysis.

1906 FOODLINK For food safety specialists in city, county and other settings. Food safety alerts are posted to this list when appropriate. FOODLINK was first established as part of a food safety grant. The list was intended to serve as an immediate, reliable method of communicating foodborne illness outbreaks to county health districts in Washington State. The list continues to serve as a forum for discussion of food safety issues and an exchange of information between professionals involved in prevention of foodborne illness.

1908 GOATS Non-threatening environment for Q & A about goat management. The list has been active since February 1994. The guiding premise of GOATS is that there is no such thing as a "stupid question." We are all sharing a common experience with technology: some of us are further down the road; others of us need a little help catching up. GOATS is hosted by Washington State University, College of Agriculture and Home Economics and Cooperative Extension.

1913 MGARDEN For Master Gardeners. Most of the subscribers to this list are either Master Gardeners, provide training and supervision for Master Gardener volunteers, or are just plain interested in gardening. The Master Gardener program was started at Washington State University as a method of recruiting and training Master Gardener volunteers in communities. In exchange for training, the volunteers pledged 100 hours of service to their communities. Usually, though, volunteers put in much more than the pledged 100 hours.

PESTCON's composition of subscribers includes experts in entomology, pest control application, safety engineers, facilities administrators, state and local Extension units, grounds and housekeeping departments, etc., and steadily remains at a 20% rate of international subscribers. The philosophy of Integrated Pest Management seeks to determine available options and apply the safest yet effective solutions in maintaining acceptable levels of pest populations.

Ecology and Environmental Studies

1950 AE The current state of the art and future direction of alternative energy sources that are renewable and sustainable. It is not intended to discuss either AE appropriateness or comparisons with conventional energy sources such as fossil or nuclear fuels. Those "discussions" are best relegated to the appropriate usenet newsgroup. An alternative energy source is taken to include solar, wind, geothermal, tidal, electro-chemical, hydro-electric, or any renewable and sustainable energy source. It is also assumed to exclude fuels such as fossil and nuclear since these literally take an act of God to create.

The Energy and Climate Information Exchange (ECIX) is a project of EcoNet aimed at educating the environmental community and the general public on the potential of energy efficiency and renewable energy to reduce the use of fossil fuels and their contribution to climate change. ECIX now offers as a public service the distribution of files pertaining to energy and climate change. We accept files electronically submitted by those who wish to share information, advertise the existence of the files, and electronically mail files to those who request them. ECIX is an EcoNet project funded by a grant from the Joyce Mertz-Gilmore Foundation with added support from the Energy Foundation.

1963 ECOFEM For a variety of viewpoints concerning women and the environment. These include the wide ranging views on feminism (liberal, radical, socialist, postmodern, and yours!) and the multi-hued "environment." As such, ECOFEM is designed as an open space for dialogue, allowing a diversity of thought and multiple approaches to the topic of women and the environment. We hope that ECOFEM will provide a network where a range of information concerning women and environment may be shared, including: grassroots activism, legislative action, treaties/conventions, publications (poetry and prose), syllabi, conferences, job opportunities, upcoming events, book & film reviews, et cetera. ECOFEM's scope covers local to international arenas, but these boundaries are reference points rather than any solid demarcation. We hope to foster a space for addressing the tensions in and between theory and practice, and we welcome and encourage a variety of knowledges to participate on ECOFEM.

1964 ECOL-ECON It is necessary to have major change in the way we think about economics if we intend to make a credible response to the environmental threats to the planet. The list is to create discussion around alternatives to the prevailing economic paradigms, whether Marxist or neoclassical. This is an invitation to join persons of similar intent for creative intellectual work and to create more rapid change in economic thought. We plan to discuss and build archives around such questions as sustainability, the role of economic growth, free trade and the environment, and the role of multilateral economic institutions in the sustainability of the development process.

1969 EDUWLF-L For communication between members of the College and University Wildlife Education Working Group and interested publics. The Wildlife Society has established working groups to improve networking among its membership, to help keep up with the latest information in the wildlife professions sub-disciplines, and to assist with ideas, advice, and problem-solving. The College and University Wildlife Education Working Group works to foster the development of professionals working as college/university educators and to improve the quality of higher education in wildlife ecology and conservation. The group provides a forum for communication among educators regarding issues such as curricula, graduate education, innovative teaching approaches, course development, technology in the classroom, improving critical thinking, experimental learning, advising, writing-across-curricula, and peer review of teaching.

1974 ENVBUS-L For persons and organizations who are interested in business and environmental issues in Central and Eastern Europe (CEE) to include the following countries: Albania, Bulgaria, Croatia, Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Slovak Republic, Slovenia, and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. The main mission of this list is to promote cooperation among diverse environmental groups and interests in Central and Eastern Europe; to act as a catalyst for developing solutions to environmental problems in this region; and to promote the development of a civil society. This list is the first attempt by the Regional Environmental Center for Central and Eastern Europe (REC) to encourage businesses to join the dialogue in the CEE. The REC believes that before sustained environmental progress can be achieved in the CEE, it is necessary to promote the development of a strong environmental business sector.

Environmental professionals are essential for the practical implementation of environmental policies, regulations, and innovative ideas in the industrial and urban settings. With this in mind, this list hopes to encourage dialogue between environmental professionals and organizations in the CEE and from around the world with a focus on CEE environmental problems.

2005 UNU.ZERI.IBS The use of biological technologies, in an integrated manner, in aquaculture, agriculture, industry, forestry and animal husbandry. This list will serve to gather people of a wide area of interests. UNU.ZERI.IBS is created by the Zero Emission Research Initiatives (ZERI) Project, The United Nations University, Tokyo and in-cooperation with the Ecotechnology Network (ECOTEC). Specialised lists will then cater for in-depth discussions and would involve experts, practitioners, entrepreneurs, researchers and students. Such lists will discuss specific technologies for selected integrated systems; they may concern mushrooms, algae, biogas, earthworm, biofertilisers; biopesticides, fish and small animal farming, waste-water treatment and reuse, etc. The general objectives of UNU.ZERI series are (a) to promote the research and use of ecologically sound and economically viable technologies in integrated bio-systems through the exchange of information of experiences; (b) to discuss how traditional self-reliant technologies and frontier high technologies can be combined and used in an integrated manner; (c) to stimulate research on problems related to their applications, integration and economic sustainability. Through value-added reutilization of agro-industrial and agricultural by-products or materials, these technologies should contribute to zero emissions, i.e. production and manufacturing "without wastes" and to provide opportunities for increased income generation and small entrepreneurship development in a environmentally sustainable manner.

2042 BALINT For physicians and psychoanalysts engaged in dealing with the multifarious problems engendered in the course of the medical treatment of hospitalized patients; problems generally related to the complex interactions between the medical staff, the patient and the hospital. Balint groups first emerged in England in the 1950s in an attempt to apply psychoanalysis to the medico-patient relationship. Several clinicians grouped together under the coordination of a psychoanalyst to discuss why psychological issues raised by the patient tended to be ignored by psychologically untrained physicians, thus stagnating the patient's condition and thereby preventing her/his improvement. A multidisciplinary framework is fostered with the aim of integrating the sense of a mind-body split, so unfortunately pervasive in current medical practice.

2051 CTF To help those seeking clinical trials for any problem to communicate with hospitals and other medical providers offering the same and for the medical community to announce trials. Medical facilities are urged to subscribe to the list and post detailed descriptions of trials they are conducting or intend to conduct. The more details given, the better. Also, the trial's approval by an appropriate authority should be shown. Patients or caretakers should post as much information as they are comfortable describing as to medical problems for which they are seeking a medical trial. Discussion in general of trials and medical problems should not be posted to the list. The idea is to keep the bandwidth at a minimum so that all interested will keep watch for postings without feeling overburdened by too much mail.

2093 Ovarian Ovarian cancer, and other ovarian disorders (such as ovarian cysts). Ovarian cancer will be the primary focus of the list. This list is not to be used for discussing other issues such as reproductive/fertility problems. Ovarian cancer strikes tens of thousands of women each year, killing thousands of them. Because of the difficulty of early detection, Ovarian cancer is unnecessarily fatal to a great percentage of women who are diagnosed. Ovarian is for patients, family, friends, researchers, and physicians. It is free to use. It includes patient experiences, psychosocial issues, new research, clinical trials, and discussions of treatment alternatives. This list is not associated with any company or group and is run entirely by volunteers.

2094 PAIN-L A broad range of topics: i.e. the philosophical approach to dealing or coping with these anomalies and examine the frustration that patients feel about what is perceived to be a lack of responsiveness and inadeqate information. Often the search for information is costly and time consuming. Decisions are made which are not totally informed. Physicians promote various treatments. The surgeons promote surgery and others promote drugs, but causation is often ignored and the patient's mental concerns are not being met. Medication is prescribed for which there is too little known with regard to long term effects and their psychological impact on the patient.

2163 NISMEDINFO A project of the National Public Health and Hospital Institute's NISHEALTH Clearinghouse, this list aims to help improve the distribution of up-to-date medical and public health information to physicians and health professionals in the former Soviet Union and the countries of Central and Eastern Europe. Access is restricted to users from the New Independent States of the Former Soviet Union and the countries of Central and Eastern Europe NISMEDINFO provides abstracts from leading Western medical and public health journals. It also provides information for health professionals on how to locate other health and medical resources on the Internet. Any health professional from the NIS or a Central or Eastern European country who has access to an Internet e-mail address may receive this information free of charge. NPHHI will continually seek to expand the resources of NISMEDINFO by contacting organizations which are working on improving the flow of information to the NIS and Central and Eastern Europe. In an effort to provide as many information resources as possible, NISMEDINFO will include full-text articles, handbooks, and other documents in both English and Russian as they become available.

National and other-level data may also be pertinent. This listserv is one of the products resulting from a RWJ Foundation-funded project to improve health data for policymaking. It was developed as one way to make health data resources more accessible to the health policy and research community. Many of the members have been involved in this project and advised on ways to improve maternal and infant data. Contributors will make some summary tables available, will notify members of new reports or studies that they feel will be of interest, and will report on other data initiatives in which they are involved or know about.

in 1992 as a result of collaboration between users in the United Kingdom, The Netherlands, Germany, Italy, France, and the Scandinavian countries. The EALA organises in collaboration with the American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME) a biennial series of International Conferences on Laser Anemometry. Disclaimer: This unmoderated list is not to be considered an official organ of the DALA.

2257 ITI-L Infrastructure issues from both within and outside the university community. ITI-L is also a discussion list for the research associates of the Infrastructure Technology Institute at Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois. Appropriate topics for discussion include upcoming ITI or related departmental events, ITI administrative matters, ITI newsletters or other publications, ITI project progress reports, questions for faculty at Northwestern concerning their projects, reference or research inquiries for ITI faculty or the ITI Librarian, or any other topics of interest to the infrastructure community. The Institute was established at Northwestern in 1991 with funds from the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991 legislation. The Institute's purpose is to develop a research program to combat the nation's crumbling infrastructure problem using the resources of the university, namely the departments of civil, electrical, industrial, mechanical engineering and materials science; the Basic Industrial Research Laboratory; the Center for Quality Engineering and Failure Prevention; NSF Center for Advanced Cement-Based Materials; and other departments and centers on campus.

Military Science

2359 c4i-pro Mailing list for use by anyone interested or involved in the area of command, control, communications, computers and intelligence (C4I). It serves as a clearinghouse for (unclassified/non-sensitive) information and activities of interest to members of the C4I professional community. This includes military and government civilian members (both in operational, acquisition and policy positions), C4I contractors and members of the academic community worldwide. The c4i-pro list is managed by students and faculty of the Naval Postgraduate School's Joint C4I Systems curriculum. DISCLAIMER/WARNING: members are reminded that classified information, Privacy Act data, For Official Use Only (FOIA) information, and Scientific and Technical Information (STINFO) are not allowed on this mailing list. Messages posted on this list do not necessarily represent DoD policy.

2363 SIHD A new initiative within the U.S. Army known as the "Soldier Information Highway." The goal of this initiative is "Internet access and training for all U.S. soldiers." Topics of discussion on SIHD will include technical, legal, security, funding, training, and many other issues. Participants will have the opportunity to discuss both local and centralized efforts. Local efforts will deal mostly with providing local Internet access. Centralized efforts will work to resolve common issues and establish centralized capabilities and information resources. One short note: This list is not the "highway" itself, but rather a forum for discussing it. Also, to avoid program conflicts, the Soldier Information Highway Program will not deal with any form of secure or military mission-oriented communications. SIHD subscribers should include active and retired members of the United States military (and family members) and U.S. Government civilians.

2484 WX-TALK Weather-related topics, special event notifications, job announcements, and administrative messages. As 95% of the administrative messages we send are applicable to all the lists, we decided that it would be easier (for subscribers and for the network) to continue sending administrative messages only to WX-TALK but to create a special sub-topic that would allow users to receive only Administrivia messages if they so desire. In this way we can send just one copy of the message to WX-TALK instead of a copy to every group. By default everyone who subscribes to WX-TALK will receive all messages.

2657 CYBERNEWS-PUBLISH-L/CYBERNEWS-TALK-L Two e-mail lists carry all of the news and conversations. They are: CYBERNEWS-PUBLISH list (for news) and the CYBERNEWS-TALK (for talk) list. We use two separate lists so that news editors and readers can receive only ready-to-publish news from one list, while carrying on conversations on the other list. Please give credit where credit is due: if you are re-posting someone else's story, get permission first. If you are posting a story lead, rather than a proven fact, please state so clearly at the beginning of your piece! Other journalists can follow up on your lead if you give enough information, so please include as much attribution as possible, names, phone numbers, e-mail addresses, etc. Do not send hoaxes. 2723 ISODE Focuses on the ISO Development Environment, an openly available implementation of some of the higher-level protocols adopted by international organizations (ISO, CCITT, ECMA). These implementations are hosted on top of TCP/IP using the method discussed in RFC983. Appropriate topics are: questions about how to use ISODE (and announcements of ports to other target environments), discussion of ISODE as a part of a TCP/IP to ISO migration strategy, exchange of ideas regarding ISO-based applications running in a native TCP/IP environment, and debate regarding where ISODE should go next. The list naturally has some overlap with the TCP-IP list, the ISO list, and so on; contributors are urged to use the appropriate list based on their topic of discussion.

2724 IXO Discussion about pagers and software that implement the "IXO" protocol. The "IXO" protocol is used to send a message via modem from your computer to a paging service. The paging service then broadcasts the message so that it displays on your alphanumeric pager. Most alphanumeric pagers use the "IXO" protocol (now commonly known as "TAP" or "PET"). Tom Limoncelli developed the pioneer "tpage" program that speaks the "IXO" protocol through a modem connected to your Unix system, and this list has centered on tpage use for much of its life. Another well known but more recent program that does much the same is "sendpage"; also there are now a number of other programs available, one of which may be more suited to your needs. The IXO FAQ gives details of how these programs can be obtained and summarizes benefits where information was available. The IXO FAQ can be obtained from ftp://ftp.airnote.net/pub/paging-info/ixo.faq.

2726 MSP-L Hosts participating in NJE/RSCS-based networks (e.g. BITNET) provide their users with a messaging command (CMS TELL, VMS SEND) that allows them to communicate one-on-one in "real time." No such capability is standard in TCP/IP-based networks. RFC-1312 (Message Send Protocol 2) is an experimental protocol that proposes a method to provide this feature under TCP/IP. List MSP-L will discuss implementations, perceived shortcomings, and proposed enhancements of the protocol. A secondary goal is to promote wider use of the protocol, thereby enhancing its utility.

2911 INTERPEDIA The proposed Internet Encyclopedia. The original idea, due to Rick Gates, was for volunteers to cooperatively write a new encyclopedia, put it in the public domain, and make it available on the Internet. Participants on the mailing-list have expanded the concept by noting that the bibliography entries and references provided with Interpedia articles could include hypertext links to other resources available on the Internet. Unlike any printed encyclopedia, the Interpedia could be kept completely up-to-date. Indeed, it could include hypertext links to ongoing discussions, and perhaps evolve into a general interface to all resources and activities on the Internet.

2923 NETDYNAM Online group dynamics: the purpose will be to examine the process itself of writing through listservers – perceptions of the other participants, the dynamics of flame wars, power and persuasion, what is effective communication and why... This will ideally be done in an atmosphere of mutual support and trust but it – emphatically – will not be group psychotherapy. The purpose of the list will be the search for dynamic principles of online mailing lists in general. The operation of the list will be as open and non-directive as possible, based on the Tavistock model of group dynamics projects where rules and explicit expectations are initially kept in abeyance so that they may emerge, be examined and formulated, spontaneously.

2927 NEW-LIST A central address to post announcements of new public mailing lists. In addition, "NEW-LIST" might be used as a final verification before establishing an list (to check for existing lists on the same topic, etc.). However, be sure to check sources such as the Internet List-of-Lists (SIGLIST or INTEREST-GROUPS list), listserv GROUPS, Usenet News newusers lists, and the LISTS database on the major listservs (we have the LISTS database on vm1.nodak.edu). It is not our intent to replace the various e-conferences of e-conferences that are available. 2929 NewbieNewz Internet training list for new users, offering Patrick Crispen's ROADMAP workshop. You need to join NewbieNewz to get all of the latest and greatest of this super workshop. This might be a list for you if you want to greatly shorten your learning curve for mastering the basics of e-mail and using mailing lists telnet, gopher, ftp, wais, web browsers, finding the right Usenet group for your special interests, learning how to use TCP/IP clients, and darned near anything else a "newbie" might want to know browsing in the World Wide Web writing HTML documents. This might also be a list for you if you want to help others, through a relatively sane forum. Experienced users are always welcome to lurk, learn new things, and to contribute with an occasional helping hand by answering a newbie's question or giving a useful pointer to a resource on the Internet. No flaming is ever passed to the list, but frank discussions are welcome as long as the focus stays upon learning about the Internet. It is assumed that participants support the general idea of learning how to find out how to do things for themselves, without running into net cops, flamers, and others who have nothing better to do with their time than to hassle new users. 2966 INFO-ANDREW For recipients of the Andrew distribution (and implementors of Andrew). Andrew, a joint project of Carnegie-Mellon University and IBM, is a prototype computing environment for academic and research use under the UNIX operating system. Info-Andrew is available in both Andrew multi-media format (if you have the AMS up and running) and plain-text format. By default you will be sent plain-text versions of the posts, but you can request a change in which version you receive by sending mail to the -Request address. When sending a message to this list, you should feel free to include any multi-media images (rasters, animations, etc.) which might help to express your question, comment, etc. Such images will automatically be stripped out and replaced by "A picture appeared here" before being redistributed to the plain-text recipients. If you subscribe you will automatically be added to INFO-ANDREW-BUGS.

3000 OBJECTPAL-L A forum for ObjectPAL programmers to present questions and/or problems to other ObjectPAL programmers. Responses based on your experiences are encouraged in order to make the forum successful! This list is not intended for tutorial advice in the use of interactive PDOXWIN, and, as a courtesy to others on the list (to keep the volume relatively low), it is assumed that the user will have consulted the manual and online help (i.e. made a reasonable attempt to solve her/his problem) prior to addressing the question to the list. After you have done this–regardless of how simple your question may seem - please DO post the question to the list; that is its purpose. When posting questions, please include enough details in the question so that the question can be clearly understood by an 'outsider.' Sample SOURCE code may be attached or included, as necessary. (Please use conventions of ASCII or UUENCODE for consistency.) This list is in no way associated with Borland International. Neither is it a Borland-bashing forum; its purpose is to provide its members access to each others' expertise in the field of ObjectPAL programming. If seemingly unresolvable problems with O'PAL/PDOXWIN are discovered, this may be a good place to "hash out" the issue before sending an enhancement request or problem report to Borland.

3040 GNET Computer-mediated communication networks are growing rapidly, yet they are not truly global - they are concentrated in affluent parts of North America, Western Europe, and parts of Asia. GNET is an archive/journal for documents pertaining to the effort to bring the net to lesser-developed nations and the poorer parts of developed nations. (Net access is better in many "third world" schools than in South-Central Los Angeles.) GNET consists of two parts, an archive directory and a moderated discussion.

3043 ICOM-SWEDEN - ICOM-Announce The International Council of Museums consists of international committees which fill disciplinary needs within the museum sector and national committees which meet the interdisciplinary needs of individual countries, cover issues of concern to the committee and its constituent institutions. Particular emphasis will be placed on means by which these organizations can make their information resources available to the network community. This will include discussion of means for providing and accessing network services, as well as general announcements of museum activities. Also serves as a forum for the discussion of issues which may arise when establishing network services for communities with language requirements that are not entirely fulfilled by the existing standards regulating the Internet. Problems of this type will occur with the vernacular distribution lists of other ICOM national committees, and it is hoped that the discussion on ICOM-SWEDEN will be of utility to the other committees when confronting these problems. Although the primary intent of the list is to serve specified needs of the museum community, relevant contributions are welcome from people who are not directly involved with such institutions.

3046 INFO-FUTURES Digest to provide a speculative forum for analyzing current and likely events in technology as they will affect our near future in computing and related areas. In broad terms, topics of interest include developments in both computing research and industry which are likely to affect our decision-making, particularly decisions we are probably grappling with right this minute. Technologies can change so rapidly that simply forecasting for needs within any organization one or two years in advance can be extremely difficult; frequently we are forced to provide foundations that effectively lock us into a technology for longer periods of time. It is hoped the information this list provides can help both the practitioner and researcher determine where best to expend resources.

Index

Keyword/Title/Institutional Affiliation List

This Index is an integrated alphabetical file. The numbers beside the index terms are the numbers for the entries in this Directory. Note that "J" before the number indicates that the entry is in the journals/newsletters section, and "L" before the number indicates that the entry is in the discussion lists section. Journal and Newsletter titles followed by an * indicate that the editor did not respond to inquiries and the information is compiled from other sources, including the 1995 listing and visiting the site. After a List name, • indicates it is a Usenet umbrella group for a number of discussion threads.
